A Great Juvenile Drama--how it Brought Down the House.

Some of the nice children of Commonwealth avenue, says the Boston Globe, recently purposed to surprise their parents with a dramatic performance with the distinct understanding that no adult was to witness a rehearsal or to ask about the nature of the play written by a young miss of ten years who was to assume the role of heroine, assisted by a lad of the same age. On the night of the performance the parents of the children assembled in the front drawing room of one of the largest residences and waited for the drawing aside of the portieres with commendable patience. The first scene represented the wedding of the hero and heroine and the departure of the former for the wilds of the west, where he was to reap his fortune in raising cattle and mining. This went off finely, and the portieres were closed with a loud burst of applause. A lapse of ten years was supposed to have elapsed between the first and second acts, and when the act commenced the young husband had returned, and his wife, not looking a day older, greeted him in a formal manner, and even asked him to remain and dine with her, which he consented to do. While sitting at the table eating ice cream the husband told how he had toiled for wealth and acquired millions, all for the sake of the dear wife he had left behind. This had such an effect on the matron that she finished her ice cream, sighed to think there was no more on the table, and then addressed her husband, speaking earnestly and firmly: "You have done well," she said, "but while you have been at work I have not been idle. You shall see what I have accomplished." She touched a belle and a white capped bonne entered the room leading a toddling infant a year old, and followed by nine others of various ages, one for each year of married life. The actors to this day do not understand why the play was interrupted by shouts of laughter and applause from the mothers and fathers present. At any rate they say the play was a success but the parents think it a little Frenchy in construction and plot.

A Willy Writer.

Herbert S. Stone, the Chicago publisher, described at a dinner in Washington the amusing methods of a newspaper writer who used to write articles at a set rate a column.

He was once commissioned to do a serial story for a Chicago paper. The story, as it proceeded from week to week, was interesting, but it contained many passages like the following:

"Did you hear him?"
"I did."
"Truly?"
"Truly."
"Where?"
"By the well."
"When?"
"Today."
"Then he lives?"
"He does."
"Ah."

The editor, sending for the man, said: Hereafter we will pay you by the letters in your serial. We will pay you so much a thousand letters."

The young man looking crestfallen, went away, but in the very next instalment of his story he introduced a character who stuttered, and all through the chapter were passages like this:

"B-b-b-b-believe me, s-s-sir. I am n-n-n-not g-g-g guilty. M-m-m-mother c-c-c-committed this c-c-c-crime."

Absent-minded.

An old gentleman who was very absent-minded often had to ring for his servant and say,—

"James, I am looking for something, and now I can't remember what it is."

And then James would suggest,—

"Your purse, sir, or spectacle or check-book?" and so on, until the old gentleman would say at last,—

"Of course, that's it. Thank you, James."

One night the old gentleman had gone to his room and all were in bed when James was startled by hearing his master's bedroom bell. He rushed upstairs and threw open the door.

"James," said the old gentleman, "I came up here for something and now can't remember what it was."

"Wasn't it to go to bed, sir?"

"Of course," said the old gentleman, "so it was. Thank you, James."—August Lippincott's.

Noon in the Woods.

(Roland Whittle, in the San Francisco 'News Letter.')

'Hush,' said the pine on the hill,
And all of them listened together—
Listened and nodded and grew so still,
Still in the golden weather—
And the squirrel who fancied he'd something to do
And chattered awhile complaining,
Felt the spell of the silence creep over him, too,
For noon in the woods was reigning.

And the sunshine slips through the boughs,
And gold is the place of its falling,
Gold where the wild doves murmur and drowse,
And gold is the coo of their calling.
The little bright eyes have closed in sleep,
And hushed is the sob of complaining,
For silence broods, as it broods on the deep,
When noon in the woods is reigning.

For Tender Feet.

Old shoes are not all they are cracked up to be. When the soles are worn down, paper thin, there is no more prolific source of callous places under the ball of the foot. Cobblestones, hot concrete, inequalities in the pavement—every trifling circumstance that, were the feet well shod, would be passed unnoticed, bruise and irritate the feet through the thin soles.

Cheap shoes are quite as bad. A cheap sole soon gets full of humps and hollows, or it warps, or sometimes cracks into a deep ridge across, producing immense discomfort to the foot inside. Sometimes a good, perfectly new shoe will produce a welt across the foot above the toes. It may be a wrinkle in the lining, or in the shoe itself, but the result is pretty much the same in either case. If the shoe store or cobbler cannot remedy the trouble, try taking a small piece of white felt, pare down the edges as thin as possible, and place it inside the stockings over the welt.

If the foot is aching or smarting badly after one has walked or stood a lot, relief may be obtained by plunging it for a few minutes in hot water in which a handful of salt has been dissolved. Then cool the water off gradually till it is quite cold. Moderately warm water to which a little ammonia has been added is also immensely restful to tired, hot feet.

The nails of the toes stand in just as much need of careful, systematic cutting as do the finger nails. Some people, you know, let them go till they wear holes through their stockings, and then they complain about the miserable, flimsy way they make stockings these days. Cut the nails twice a week regularly, and cut them straight across, not rounding. To allow a nail to grow long is to tempt Providence, for it runs the risk of being pressed into the skin, and it may take you weeks to overcome the pain and trouble caused by that trifling neglect.

Errors We Make.

At the Fielding banquet the Attorney-General spoke of the Athenian captain who was asked, "Where are your walls, your fortifications?" to which came the ready response, pointing to his army, "There are my walls, and every man's a brick." The Globe reported it as "Fenian" captain, but the joke is on both the newspaper and the speaker, as the captain was a Spartan. The late Lord Herschell, speaking in Toronto, quoted Bishop Heber's lines about the island where "every prospect pleases and only man is vile." The Globe printed "Ireland" for island, and there were wigs on the green. Sir Richard Cartwright was once the victim of a ludicrous error which the Globe describes: "The old lion of debate had uttered a splendid defiance and electrified his hearers with the words, 'Strike and spare not, as Themistocles says.' Hansard came out next day with the words 'Strike, and spare not, as Peter Mitchell says.'" Nicholas Flood Davin about six years ago quoted Byron's famous lines in the Corsair: "The mildest mannered man that ever scuttled ship or cut a throat." The telegraphic report to The Advertiser read: "The mildest-mannered man that ever stuck a sheep or cut a throat."—London Advertiser.

Spraying.

A recent report from the Delaware Experiment Station contains some interesting conclusions drawn from various experiments by Prof. Sanderson. He finds that arsenate of lead (disparance) used at the strength of one pound to fifty gallons of water gives conspicuously better results than Paris green, green arsenoid, arsenite of lime or arsenite of soda. We might say that this general preference for disparance over Paris green seems to be emphasized by all reports coming to hand. The report says further that spraying trees three times does not give enough benefit to warrant the three sprayings, if the first two are carefully made. It should be understood, of course, that this conclusion applies only to the use of arsenical poisons. In applying Bordeaux mixture for fungous diseases we would not by any means get as good results, for four or five or even six sprayings have often been shown to be profitable. Professor Sanderson finds the addition of adhesives in spraying mixtures to be of doubtful value. The general profitability of spraying was also strongly reaffirmed by these experiments.—[Country Gentleman.

Good Painting
Is the best painting. There's economy in it. Good paint saves the painter's time by spreading easy; it saves in cost of material by covering most surface to the gallon; it saves in final cost of the job by wearing longest.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINT
is good paint. It is made from the best materials so thoroughly incorporated that they are inseparable and hold together against the weather for the longest time. Come in and get color card showing the 42 shades.
