

Keep Your Grip On Health WHEN PHYSICAL BANKRUPTCY THREATENS BUILD UP WITH Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Gloomy forebodings, fear of the future, apprehension of something dreadful to befall you, worry over little things, restlessness, insomnia, irritability—these are the indications of an exhausted nervous system.

They tell more plainly than words, more plainly than pains and aches, that, gradually but certainly, the nerve force of the body is being consumed more rapidly than it is being created.

They point to physical bankruptcy—to helplessness of mind and body—to prostration, paralysis or locomotor ataxia.

There are certain elements of nature which go to form new blood and new nerve cells—to create new nerve force, the foundations of life, energy and vitality. These elements are so combined in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as to be easily assimilated by the most weakened human body.

Being composed of such ingredients, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cannot possibly fail to be of benefit to you, and its regular and persistent use will build up and revitalize the most exhausted and discouraged sufferer.

You cannot compare Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with any medicine you ever used, for it cures by the up-building process, whereas most nerve treatments merely soothe and deaden the nerves. Test this treatment by noting your increase in weight.

Mrs. Robert Bustard, Maxwell, York Co., N. B., writes: "I can say that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food entirely cured me of what I believe was the beginning of locomotor ataxia or paralysis. My nerves were very bad and at night I could not sleep at all, nor could I control my arms and legs. They seemed to fairly jerk me off the bed.

"For six months I was this way and cannot describe what I suffered but now I am entirely cured, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. It is a pleasure to recommend this great medicine to anyone suffering as I did from nervous disease.

Lest We Forget?

The day has long passed when Americans travelling in foreign countries can be made to feel apologetic over their nationality. But in these days of general recognition of our greatness—when the American duchesses have become so numerous that we cannot keep track of them—there still remain a few who will remind us that we are not quite perfect.

In a recent lecture the speaker, an Englishwoman who had lived many years in Japan, dwelt upon the admirable manners of the inhabitants of that land, but said that she must admit that in no place their behavior was not above censure; on the railroad-trains she had been surprised and disappointed to see them pushing and crowding in a manner quite foreign to their habitual gentleness and grace.

"How do you account for such a thing?" demanded a voice in the audience. "It can be explained," replied the lecturer, simply, "only in this way. In Japan the proper conduct for every occasion in life has been prescribed from antiquity. Consequently, from childhood every one knows just what he ought to do and does it gracefully. But when the railroad was introduced there was, of course, no precedent for behavior on trains; so the Japanese adopted the American manners."

What They Read.

Three of Toronto's most prominent business men were recently asked what books they pick up when the cares of companies leave them time for an hour's unprofessional reading. The one who might most truly be called a person of affairs replied: "If you won't say anything about it I'll tell you. At least don't mention my name in connection with the books, or the directors will take fright. There are two little books that are more worn than any others in the library. One of them is Alice in Wonderland and the other is The Dolly Dialogues. I don't read much new fiction; the newspapers keep me busy." I wondered if the last sentence were satirical, but the financier looked quite serious.

"Then you don't read the novels with a purpose?" "I should think not. My wife reads Mrs. Humphry Ward, but when I get away from business I want to get utterly away into something like another world. The Maquade was the last novel I read and I don't know when I'll read another."

The second man said: "I don't read fiction at all. I look at the advertisements in the magazines but I don't have time for the articles. I'll tell you what I like for recreation—something scientific like Lubbock's books. I read Maeterlinck's book about the bee, and it was all right."

"You liked Maeterlinck?" "I don't know anything about him except that book. I heard some one call it a prose poem, but it's nothing of the kind. It's as read to nature as a man could write and quite sensible. I know what he's talking about, because when I was a boy—

But the reminiscence was interrupted and when the conversation was resumed I asked, "Don't you care for poetry?" "I haven't read any since I left the High school. There's a poem of Eugene Field's that I cut out of a paper years ago—Little Boy Blue. I wondered if there had been some pathetic reason for that particular poem being preserved. There are a good many scrap-books in the country that have Little Boy Blue in a quiet, honored corner.

The third man said: "I haven't read a novel later than Stevenson's Sr. Ives. The old ones are good enough for me. I like Stanley Weymen's yarns and some of Anthony Hope's. But there isn't one of them that can touch Lorna Doone. I believe I've read that book a dozen times and I'm more in love with Lorna than when I first met her. She's the sort of heroine that a man likes—plenty of spirit, but a lovable woman through it all. Westward Ho! is another story that I manage to read every other year. You see my grandfather came from Devonshire."

I was speaking afterwards to a clergyman about how little interest was taken in the "serious novel and he laughed. "I won't read a novel that is a study of anything. Robert Elsmere and other theological novels don't interest me at all. I like a story that is a story. Scott and Dumas are the novelists for me. The Three Musketeers is splendid." Whereupon I reflected that there is no prophesying what the world will elect to read.—Toronto Saturday Night.

A Delayed Flight.

There was once a young robin who wanted to fly. He sat in his nest with three brothers and sisters, his occupation being to conceal within his elastic person as many worms as came his way. Being the brightest one of the bunch, he was regarded with marked favor by his hard-working, lawn-listening parents.

"Mamma," he remarked one day, "when do you think it would be wise to venture forth into the unknown world?" His mother eyed him critically.

"You must first," she remarked, "read a book on the theory and practice of aerostation."

"Is this necessary?" remarked the young robin, plaintively, as he observed his sister Jane, who was already being neglected, beginning to practice the double-wing flap.

"It is, indeed," replied his mother, severely. "You have genuine talent, and you cannot expect to accomplish anything unless you consult authorities. Read eight pages a day."

So the young robin gave a supercilious look at the rest of the family, put on a pair of spectacles, and settled down to cultivate himself.

In a short time he became very much absorbed in his studies.

"I perceive," he remarked to himself, "that there is a good deal more in this flying business than I had any idea of. Indeed, it involves all the ultimate problems of philosophy. First I must train my mind to think, then I must go over what is already known on the subject, after which I shall be in a position for original investigation."

So he studied on. By and by, however, he became conscious of a gone feeling inside. He also became aware that he had more space outside. He looked up and found he was alone.

Brother Charlie was picking up a long worm on the lawn below. Sister Jane was practising the Newport slant in the atmosphere between, while sister Sarah was trying to skip from bough to bough without missing a stroke. Pa and Ma were nowhere to be seen. But a monstrous cat on a near fence was looking suspiciously complacent.

Consumption

There is only one cure for it. "PSYCHINE" is the greatest remedy in the world for all forms of pulmonary trouble. Scores of people in Canada attest this fact. "PSYCHINE" stands without a rival as a permanent and absolute cure for Consumption and lung diseases. It reaches the sore spots, heals the decayed tissue, destroys the tubercle germs, creates rich blood, tones up the whole system, and cleanses from all impurities.

"I guess," said the young robin "it is about time for me to get a move on. Let's see; in order to retain a sustained equilibrium I must consider Smith's law and also the resistance of certain ratios of density."

He paused fearfully and looked over the edge of the nest.

"Hey, brother Charles!" he called to his brother below. "How did you get down there?"

"Flew," said brother Charles, calmly, as he took a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether, and pulled out about a yard of desert.

"But, brother Charles, didn't you read any of these books before you learned to fly?"

"Not much. I didn't have time."

"Say, brother, I'm getting very hungry. Couldn't you pass up a piece of that worm?" Brother Charles sliced off a few inches with his bill, and, by getting a good moving start, carried it to the flower of the family.

"My boy," he said, "let me give you a piece of advice. This is my last call. Do you want to enjoy yourself living?" "Yes, brother."

"Then learn to fly by flying, and not by reading about it. You'll take chances at first, but you'll get there."

"But aren't these books of any use at all?" Brother Charles leaped up against the bark and smiled wisely.

"Sure!" he observed. "Throw 'em at 'em!" Tom MASSON, in Life.
