

The Better Way

The tissues of the throat are inflamed and irritated; you cough, and there is more irritation—more coughing. You take a cough mixture and it eases the irritation—for a while. You take and it cures the cold. That's what is necessary. It soothes the throat because it reduces the irritation; cures the cold because it drives out the inflammation; builds up the weakened tissues because it nourishes them back to their natural strength. That's how Scott's Emulsion deals with a sore throat, a cough, a cold, or bronchitis.

A Reversion to Type.

"Don't talk to me about adopted children," said the man who adopted one, wearily. "I think they must be more trouble than children of your own. I know mine have been."

"The doctor said: There isn't a healthier child in the country. He had pneumonia last winter and it closed up one lung. Never teased him. Getting along better now with one lung than most youngsters do with two."

Upon that recommendation we took him along, my wife and I, and she proceeded to spoil him so he never was any good and never will be. Well, when the boy was about nine years old, the wife went away to the far-off country, and left the Kid and me. Then, my old friend Deams, fine fellow then, very rich, came to me and said: 'Now, what you want to do with the kid is to get a long stout rope, tie a big, heavy rock to the end of it, fasten the other end very snugly about his throat, and throw him into the river. He'll never do anything but bother the life out of you, now that the wife isn't here any longer to take care of him.'

"The boy was standing around at the time. He heard what Deams said. Deams wasn't so far wrong about the trouble the boy would give me. He never gave me much of anything else. And the money I had to spend on him! We won't speak of that. It was first one thing and then another he wanted, and he generally got it, too; partly because of the little wife, who had been fond of him, and partly on his own account. He was a winning kid, and tractable. He never talked back. He was always polite and affectionate. If I told him to do anything he would say: 'Very well, Pops,' and he smiled at me, if he didn't do it. I liked the Kid."

"I sent him first to one college and then another. I tried to get him into the navy, but some little defect in his teeth prevented. He grew up in a sort of way with what education I could get him to take, but I never could do much for him in that line, on account of his birth. He didn't take to it. He somehow or other preferred the lower strata."

"Two winters ago we had apartments in a big uptown hotel. I had found the boy a place as motorman. It was what he liked. We couldn't get a maid for the life of us that winter. It was a snowy winter and bitter cold. One night the Kid came to me and said, 'Pops, you remember that little girl who waited on the table at the hotel on the Sound last summer? She's out of a place. She'll work for us for little or nothing. Shall I tell her to come?' 'I don't want her to work for little or nothing. Kid,' I answered. 'Tell her to come and we will pay her well.'

"We the Kid brought the girl to the house. She was a nice, quiet little thing, who made life very pleasant for us, waiting on us and cooking our grub. By spring she went away. Then along in the fall Deams came to me and said: 'Look here, do you know that boy of yours is married and there is a kid?'

"'Why, no,' I said, 'who is the girl?'

"'The one that worked for you all last winter,' answers Deams. 'They were married when she went there.' Married into his own class, the Kid did. He couldn't help himself. He was born into that class and couldn't raise himself out of it."

"Well, he said to me, by and by, the Kid did: Pops, I hate to disgrace you up in this fine apartment house with my overalls. I believe I'd like to go to a country town and live."

"So I got him a place as motorman in a little Jersey town, and he is living there now with his wife and baby. Maybe he'll keep his job, and maybe he won't. Anyway, I'll always have the care of him and of his wife and baby, too, I reckon."

"It seems sort of queer, but old Deams is living in the same little town. He has lost all his money and is running a cheap hotel. The last time I saw the Kid I said to him:

"Do you know old Deams is running a hotel down there where you are?"

"'You bet I do,' he answered, 'and I haven't forgotten what he told you to do to me when I was nine years old. Listen, Pops, I've tried twice to run him down with my trolley car, but he was too quick for me. But you never mind, I'll catch him yet,' cried the Kid. 'I'll catch him yet!'

An American Aristocracy.

"Scions of Aristocracy in America" is the title of a suggestive and instructive article contributed to the May number of The North American Review by Hester Dorsey Richardson, President of the Public Records Commission of Maryland. Jeffersonian simplicity was the first orchid that flowered on the tree of American independence; and the spirit that caused the men of the Revolution to frown down everything that smattered of kings and coronets was responsible in a great number of cases for the deliberate suppression of family history, since family history was regarded as tending to foster aristocratic ideas. So, argues the author, the fact has been generally overlooked, not only by foreigners, but by Americans themselves, that there are many families in the United States which are, perhaps, of an older and "bluer" blood than the larger proportion of the families which constitute the present aristocracy of Great Britain. Mrs. Richardson tells of certain researches which have been recently undertaken, more particularly in Maryland and Virginia, which have resulted in a discovery that established the position of over five hundred of the early families of the two States named—the discovery, namely, of heraldic seals and other evidences of the use of arms in these sections, such as the mention of "escutcheons" in wills and inventories, "silver seals," "seal rings" and "plate" described as "marked with the family arms." Mrs. Richardson concludes:

"It is the American way to have the best of everything, and Americans have been accused of buying titles and even ancestors! But in the light of the original research which has for the first time directed attention to the quality of the colonial settlers of America as a class none need hope to assume forebears to whom they are not entitled, while others may find themselves with a lineage beyond the limits of their imagination."

"In every colonial State there are no doubt as rich finds, in the way of legal evidences of noble British origin, as those which have rewarded the writer for her labors. The work of investigation must be carried on by the seeker after truth in every ancient capital, north and south, before the whole story of our American aristocracy can be told."

"No higher tribute can be paid the men who, in settling this country, laid the foundation of the nation, than a rational investigation of their origin, and nothing can be more gratifying to the delver than to find the glint of good blood rather than the sombre marks of inferiority."

Napoleon.

"Napoleon at Elba" is the latest work about Napoleon. It will probably not be the last. The everlasting worship of this man is discouraging to the servants of humanity. Even his military greatness has been surely put as high as it deserves. The only two generals of real mark whom he encountered were the Archduke Charles and Wellington, both of whom defeated him; Wellington at Waterloo, the Archduke at Aspern, where, had the victory been pressed, it would probably have been decisive. He had the good fortune to begin with a series of successes gained over the out-of-date generals and wooden armies of Austria. Military men seem to be agreed that no armies were ever more miserably sacrificed than those of Napoleon in Russia and at Leipzig. But whatever may have been his glories as a general, or his abilities as an organizer and administrator, no man surely was ever a greater enemy of his kind. The European Emperor, to the creation of which he aspired, was a dream of personal ambition, and to his hopeless attempt to realize it millions of lives were sacrificed and Europe was filled with butchery and devastation. At last he was certainly impelled not only by ambition but by sheer lust of war. He had so earned the hatred of his own people, that when on his road to Elba he had to pass through part of France in disguise. Of conscience or humanity he was absolutely devoid. From no crime, cold-blooded massacre, fraud, forgery, did he ever shrink. The evil that he did lived long after him. He turned back the tide of liberal progress in Europe; for the nations to escape from his hateful and degrading yoke were fain to clasp the knees of their own masters, and the Second Empire with its crimes and the calamities which it brought on France was the deferred offspring of the First. Yet Napoleon is worshipped more than the great benefactors of mankind.—Dr. Goldwin Smith.

The only nourishment that bread affords is that which the flour contains.

Bread baking is merely putting flour in appetising form.

Flour making is merely putting the nutritious part of wheat in shape for bread making.

Good milling is the kind that takes from the wheat all that is nutritious, nothing else.

Summer School of Science.

This year the Summer School of Science for the Atlantic provinces will be held at North Sydney, opening on July 3rd, and continuing until July 20th. If one may judge from the school calendar which has recently been issued the session, which will be the twentieth in the school's history, will have many attractive features. It will have marked educational value and at the same time those who enroll at the school are certain to find their stay in North Sydney made doubly pleasant by excursions to the many points of interest near the town and by other forms of entertainment. Three classes of subjects will be taken up at the school. These are physical sciences, biological science and miscellaneous studies. A special feature will be a full course in Nature study work under the direction of Dr. John Brittain, of the McDonald Agricultural College, Montreal. Among the other members of the faculty will be Dr. G. U. Hay, St. John Prof., L. W. Baily, Fredericton, and Miss Eleanor Robinson, St. John, and the speakers at the evening meetings of the school will include Hon. G. H. Murray, Premier of Nova Scotia; Lieut. Governor Fraser of Nova Scotia; Lieut. Governor McKinnon, of P. E. Island. In the closing days of the school examinations will be held and certificates awarded to those passing them. The authorities of the Truro Normal School and of Mount Allison University, Sackville, will give students credit for work done at the school and certified to by its officers.

"I'd like that tooth, please," said the small boy, after the dentist had extracted the small torment.

"Certainly, my little man, but why do you want it?" queried the dentist, handing it over.

"Well, sir," responded the gratified boy "I'm going to stuff it full of sugar. Then I'm going to put it on a plate, and" (with a triumphant grin) "watch it ache."
