The Art of Visiting the Sick.

'From the tender mercies of our friends, good Lord deliver us!' sighed the invalid. The nurse smiled as she deftly rearranged the pillows.

'Didn't you enjoy your caller?' she asked. 'Did you know,' observed the patient, with apparent irrelevance, 'that visiting the sick is an art which very few possess? I've noticed it especially since I've been convalescing. Now, Mrs. Carmichael, who just called is one of the best women who ever bored her friends and acquaintances, and I wouldn't for the world hurt her feelings by declining to see her. But do you know what her conversation was about today? She regaled me with a detailed account of her own typhoid experience; how she had a perforation, and dear knows what all. She had typhoid so much worse, according to her statement, and suffered so much more than I, that I really felt ashamed of myself for pretending to have it at all.

'There's Edith Sayres, who dropped in yesterday. Maybe you heard her greeting: "Well, aren't you having a fine time tucked up here with a nurse to wait on you while the rest of us poor mortals are bothering with dressmakers and milliners. You look so well that I believe you've been pretending to be sick to get a little rest."

'Of course it was foolish of me, but I could have cried I felt so hurt, although I knew at the time it was just her idea of being cheerful. She wasn't as bad as Aunt Agnes, who told me I looked dreadful, simply dreadful. Her husband's sister had typhoid and when she thought she was nearly well she died, leaving five little children. She was glad I had gotten through so far, but I must remember I wasn't out of the woods yet. Then it was a pity I had been sick, for it had been such an expense to father, having the nurse and the doctor's bill. It was kind of them to keep my place at school for me, but they were likely to give it to someone else any time, for there were such lots of teachers wanting positions. I had a good cry after she left I felt so depressed.

'Cousin Margaret thinks that any old thing in the way of clothes is good enough to visit the sick in, and though she has some real pretty dresses, she'll come flying in here looking so mussed that it makes me nervous.' 'Well,' commented the nurse, with a smile, 'isn't there anyone of your friends who has the art of visiting the sick?'

'Is there,' repeated the invalid, 'haven't you noticed for yourself how much good Dorothea Kent's calls do me? They are better than a tonic. She's always dressed so carefully that it's a pleasure to look at her. Her voice is quiet and nicely pitched. It isn't loud nor yet that horrible sick room whisper that sets your nerves on edge. She saves up every bit of news she can think of to tell me, and at the same time doesn't make me feel that I am missing a lot of good times. I always hear through her who has inquired after me, and it is pleasant to know you're remembered when you are out of the world. She doesn't hurry off after a short visit, and she doesn't stay long enough to tire me. I suppose the whole secret is tact, and that she does possess more than her share of it.

'Probably the doctor knows what he is about when he sometimes shuts out all visitors, but there are all varieties of callers, and some are as undoubtedly tonics as others are depressants.

Women and Higher Education. 'The claim has been made,' says Margaret Anglin in the American 'World,' 'that higher education for women chills the heart in living the intellect, that the development of the intellect along the pathways of culture and higher thinking makes women cold and cynical in regard to human emotions.

'We are told that the super-educated college woman is incapable of being swayed by the same deep feelings as the child of nature who knows not the meaning of psychology, and to whom ethics and the subtleties of philosophy are reduced to the primitive conception of right and wrong. I doubt this very much. The woman of high education or the professional woman feels the same forces swaying her, but she knows how to control them. What higher education and the professional life do for women, however, is to eradicate the ostentatious display of feeling so long regarded as necessary for the "womanly woman."

WOODSTOCK, N. B., OCTOBER 3, 1906.

'The power to repress the emotions has no effect upon the ability to experience them. Convention and good breeding necessitate self-restraint, but the woman who can control her feelings and whose breeding and education have taught her that unnecessary display of feeling is vulgar, experiences them just the same. It is this poise of the woman of culture and intellect, of business ability and professional standing, which gives rise to the complaint that she is not capable of human sympathy and emotion.

Higher education, culture, and the broader life that has been opened to women in the last quarter century has done more toward the development of real human sympathy and feeling than all the artificiality and affection of the years before.

'When I speak of higher education I do not necessarily mean the accumulation of a lot of college degrees in dead languages or mathematics. Even in the lives of these self-restricted creatures the feelings which they have forced to lie dormant are liable to burst forth with the so-called sincerity of the untutored child of nature.

'By the woman of higher education and culture I mean one whose intellect has broadened by her life of training, and whose mind has been able to comprehend and digest the fact which education has placed before her. A woman with sensibilities and a well trained mind, a woman of strong intellectuality, despises the gushing display of feeling. If the charges of coldness are brought against her it should be with a word of thankfulness. Lack of feeling is so often hidden by the disguise of hysterical protestation and gushing emotionalism, that women of culture and refinement shudder at the thought of being placed in the same category.

'With women who are incapable of feeling, the easiest thing in the world is to assume sentiment and emotion. Naturally, as in the case of all artificiality, it is apt to be overdone. There is no reason why the holiest of emotions should not be rational, nor is there any reason why woman's power of feeling should be placed upon the basis of absence of higher education.'

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Lazy People Feel Heat.

Pittsburg Times. According to Prof. Morrison, of the University of Chicago, summer is not the logical season for taking vacations. As shown by the action of certain animals in hibernating winter is the natural time for resting and recuperating from one's labors. 'The summer heat is most enervating to the idlers, the loafers, those who have nothing to keep their minds and bodies busy. As proof of this, do we not all feel the heat more acutely on Sunday than on any other day? A 70-degree temperature on Sunday causes more suffering than one of 85 degrees on Monday. The man or woman who keeps busy on a hot day would never notice the heat, nine times out of ten, were it not for the remarks of others who have nothing to do but think and talk about the weather.'

Don't Forget That.

If your mother had thought more of herself and less of you she might be much fairer and fresher now, for she was once as good-looking as you are. She might wear better clothes even now, so that you might be proud to have your friends meet her, but remember that she mended her old clothes that she might make new for you. The wrinkles on her face, the care lines on her cheeks, and the weary looks to her eyes—all those scars are seals of her love for you.
