JOHN WALLACE, SR., returned on Tuesday from a trip to Halifax.

Bodies of the pauper dead in the District of Columbia are not to be buried in the potter's field, but are to be cremated, for Congress has appropriated fifteen thousand dollars for building a suitable crematory. Objection to cremation is heard less frequently than it was a generation ago, possibly because the people have begun to understand that incineration is only a quickening of the natural process that goes on in the ground.
