Wonders of Surgery.
(Brooklyn Eagle.)

The new surgery becomes more astonishing every day. People who are doddering into their second century are afraid that if processes and discoveries are not stopped before long there will be no way in which they can die, at least peacefully. They cannot even be allowed to look elderly. Only a day or two ago it was discovered that you could make all sorts of incisions in the surface of a fellow creature and leave no trace of that benefit, because by cutting the skin at an angle, instead of vertically, the edges could thereafter be joined without a scar. People can now run to the beauty doctor and have their noses readjusted and their chins collected with little fear of the consequences, unless they use those blistering salves that have got so many of the beauty doctors into law suits. A woman does not mind paying a good price to be made lovely, but it is asking too much indeed to pay for being made over into a fright.

And today another achievement is reported: the successful grafting of blood vessels. In this scheme veins can be attached to the arteries at new points, so that tumors or congested or injured parts may be starved out, or, if an organ is suffering for an adequate supply, it can be regenerated. Not only this, but displaced organs shifted about—a startling device, since a man might come out of his ether sleep to discover his stomach where his kidneys used to be. Organs from other animals can be fastened to the human subject. Even softening of the brain can be arrested by turning a strong arterial current into the weakened structure.

Pains in the Stomach.

After working all day, sewing, scrubbing, baking, sweeping, washing, writing, operating a typewriter, or behind the counter, a woman is sure to be tired. Its too bad a woman has to work, still that's the way the world goes, but it's a consolation to know that the pains that come through hard work and worry, such as headache, backache, indigestion and dyspepsia can be cured by Hurch Tablets. They are put up inexpensively so anyone can buy them. Ten for ten cents. All druggists.

Complimentary to British Fire Companies.

The "Insurance Post" is moved to eulogize British fire companies because of their stand in regard to San Francisco losses:

"How sturdy the Britishers are, and how steadfast, and how 'game' when going up against a great calamity? True, they will sputter and grumble and grunt and groan over the slightest increase in the ratio of blotting paper consumed to janitor service rendered,—but when a great conflagration confronts them, they are there on the spot 'with the goods,' going deep into their strong boxes and paying up and preserving their habitual sang froid as if nothing in particular had occurred. Great underwriters are the British fire underwriters, large-brained, broad-gauged, and world-ranging. The U. S. A. could not get along very well without their prompt and certain assistance, and does not want to try to do that."

Question For Questions.

The gentleman in the street gazed up at the high scaffolding and hailed the builder, whom he could just perceive at the top:

"Good morning, sir!" he cried. "Have you a moment to spare?"

"Well, I don't know," said the builder; "I'm very busy."

"Oh, but I want to see you very particularly. I have a most important question to ask you."

So the builder climbed down the ladder. "I want to ask you," said the individual, producing his card, "if your life is insured?"

"And I," exclaimed the builder, as he threw off his coat and doubled up his fists—"I want to ask you if your life is insured!"

And then, but not till then, the life insurance agent fled.

Not a Great Loss.

This story of the absent mindedness of a professor of Phillips Exeter Academy, is told by Booth Tarkington, the novelist, who was a graduate of that institution.

"This man's wife hastened in to him one morning as he sat in his study marking exercises.

"Oh," she cried, "oh, I've swallowed a pin!"

"Don't worry about it, my dear," he said, in a soothing tone. "It is of no consequence. Here"—he fumbled at his lapel—"here is another pin."

The Unfoolable You.

(Chicago News.)

When you've settled down at night,
Locked your door, put out the light,
When you've shut the world from out your little room,
When you've stopped your daily work
At the coming of the morn,
Then you're face to face with truth, amid the gloom.

For there's no one there to fool,
And your judgment dares to cool,
While the thoughts you face are merciless and true;
You may hoax the world, my boy,
With the tactics you employ,
But you've not succeeded yet in fooling you.

In the daily grist of toil,
In the treadmill and the mill,
In vicissitudes of traffic, you are wont
To be tempted to cajole,
Coax to jeopardize your soul—
Life is battle; we must smile and bear the brunt.

But at night when all is still,
When the tension's off your will,
Come the truth that must be recognized as true,
You may fool some people, boy,
With the methods you employ,
But you'll never find it easy fooling you.

Had Become Second Nature.

When "Uncle Dave" Barker had rounded out his half-century in the employ of a great dry-goods house he was summoned to the private office of the chief proprietor. "Uncle Dave," said the head of the house, "you have worked for this firm fifty years, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir," faltered the old man, wondering if he was going to be turned off as having outgrown his usefulness.

"Well, you needn't work any more, but you can come round every Saturday afternoon as long as you live, and draw your pay. The little envelope will always be waiting for you."

Tears stood in Uncle Dave's old eyes as the head of the house, after shaking him cordially by the hand and wishing him many more years of life, bowed him out.

A few days afterward, however, he came round again.

"Mr. Stevenson," he said, "I've put in three of the hardest days' work of my life—if you don't mind, I'll go back to my old place, and kind o' hang around as if I was one of the men. Maybe I can help a little once in a while, and I'll promise not to get in anybody's way."

Uncle Dave was allowed to have his way, and he went back to his old place, supremely happy.

Better Worth Knowing.

A gentleman in an address to a graduating class, says a writer in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, told the following story of the president of an ocean steamship company, who was taking a journey across the water.

When the ship was in a dangerous channel he became engaged in conversation with the pilot, an elderly man, who had spent most of his life on the water. The president of the company remarked:

"I suppose you know all about the dangerous places in this channel?"

"Nope," replied the pilot.

"You don't!" exclaimed the president.

"Then why are you in charge of that wheel?"

"Because I know where the bad places ain't."

Cheap Lighting.

"What makes it fly so?" asked a little Boston maiden as her mother brushed her hair.

"It is electricity. Didn't you know that there is electricity in your hair?" replied her mother.

"Well, mamma, aren't we wonderfully made? Here I am with electricity in my hair, and grandma has got gas in her stomach!"

"Ah, yes!" said Senator Smugg, as he interlaced his claws in a self-satisfied way in front of his corporosity. "I got my start in life by clerking in a humble grocery store at a salary of three dollars a week, and managed to save money on that." "But," replied the astute reporter, "that, of course, was before cash-registers were invented."—[Puck.]

Why Tea Quality Varies

YOU know how the quality of strawberries from the same patch will sometimes vary from one day to another.

One day sweet, compact, well ripened, well colored, richly flavored—next day it rains, is cloudy,—following picking is soggy, sour, green, coarsely-flavored, poor.

Tea, also, on account of its volatility of flavor, after picking and during the curing process is very susceptible to weather changes. A few hours of sunshine or bad weather after picking may make the difference between good and poor tea.

So that while one picking may be first class, the next from the same garden may be very poor.

I select only the pickings which come up to the Red Rose standards of richness and strength in Indian, and delicacy and fragrance in Ceylon teas, and thus that "rich, fruity flavor" of Red Rose Tea is produced and maintained.
