A considerable dissatisfaction is expressed in the various sections through which the telephone lines pass in regard to the cutting of shade trees and otherwise taking privileges which do not accrue to the companies through the Highway Act. If these lines expect any revenue from the districts through which they pass they will certainly have to respect the rights of the people in those districts for should public sentiment be against them very few contracts would continue beyond the time already subscribed for.

Mr. George L. Holyoke of Woodstock was in the village nearly the whole of last week and reports progress in the insurance business. To know Mr. Holyoke is to wish him success.

No Further Hurry.

The summer resident of Bushby had been away at the seashore for a fortnight, and had much to talk over with the postmaster on her return.

"It doesn't seem to me as if the new library building had progressed as fast while I've been away as it did in the two weeks before I went," she said, after various other matters had been discussed.

"Well, no, 'tain't natural to s'pose it would," said the postmaster. "You see, they had to keep right at it till they got the walls high enough so they'd have some shade to sit under when they took restings. When they got her up that far there's no special need to hurry any more, so long as they get her covered in before snow flies."
