Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys, surely point to weak kidney nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, find their weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen them. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is futile. It is a waste of time, and of money as well.

Frauds in Pure-Bred Stock Shows.

We find that our horned friend, the pure-bred cow, has her share of these parasites which no ordinary fly killer will destroy. Agricultural fairs are partly conducted at State expense, and some of this money is paid as prizes for herds of cattle which are driven from fair to fair like a string of race horses. In one case we are told of a man who draws a comfortable salary from the State and is also a breeder of pure-bred stock. This man, who we call A, made over one of his animals to a friend, who may be called B. Now B takes the animal some distance from home to a county fair and enters her for a prize. The judge turns out to be A, and he gives the first prize to B's entry. Later B transfers the animal back to A, who sells her on the strength of her prize winning! A horse jockey will have to stretch himself to beat that, and what a wise use of State money that is in "benefiting the live stock industry." In another case an official of a fair is thus entitled to see the entries and records. He waits until all entries are made and printed. Then, knowing just what the competition will be, he enters animals, and is not only permitted to exhibit, but awarded prizes on so-called pure-bred stock that has never been registered. There seem to be numerous cases where horns of cattle are polished and scraped so as to destroy evidence of their ages. All such things come floating to the surface.—Rural New Yorker.

ATTACK OF DIARRHOEA CURED BY ONE DOSE OF CHAMBERLAIN'S COLIC, CHOLERA AND DIARRHOEA REMEDY.

I was so weak from an attack of diarrhoea that I could scarcely attend to my duties, when I took a dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It cured me entirely and I had been taking other medicine for nine days without relief. I heartily recommend this remedy as being the best to my knowledge for bowel complaints. R. G. STEWART, of the firm of Stewart & Bro., Greenville, Ala. For sale by All Dealers.

Easily Tarned.

A small boy was asked to take dinner at the home of a distinguished professor in Princeton. The lad's mother, in fear he should commit some breach of etiquette, gave him repeated directions as to what he should and should not do.

Upon his return from the first great occasion, the mother's first question was "Hazel did you get along all right?"

"Oh, yes, mamma, well enough."
"You sure you didn't do anything that was not perfectly polite and gentlemanly?"
"Why, no—nothing to speak of."
"Then something did happen, what was it."
"But I fixed it all right, mamma."
"Tell me at once."

"Why, I got along pretty well until the meat came, but while I was trying to cut mine it slipped off onto the floor. But I made it all right."
"What did you do?"

"Oh, I just said, sort of carelessly, 'That's always the way with tough meat.'"

Stomach troubles, Heart and Kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the Stomach, etc.

A Significant Change.

The Times, discussing the reorganization of the Colonial Office, says it is surely of great significance that the term colonial, should, as now be officially confined to the Crown colonies. This is unquestionably due to the assertion at the conference of the parity of status between the self governing dominions and the mother country. The change has as full meaning as that in the middle of last century, which severed the colonies from the incongruous association with the War Department.

Everytime you serve a superstition you enslave your soul.

Wilhelm to Uncle Edward.

It is very well known that the relations between King Edward and his nephew, Kaiser William, have been none too cordial in recent years. Whatever the cause, the German Emperor was "in the sulks," and his British relatives gave him a wide berth when they visited the Continent. Matters have changed, as may be seen from the very cordial speech made ten days ago at Wilhelmshohe in proposing his uncle's health. The text as published in The London Times is as follows:—

"I would ask your Majesty to accept the warmest thanks of the Empress and of myself for the kind visit which your Majesty has paid us. I regard this visit as the expression of the sentiments of kinship and friendship which your Majesty entertains for the Empress, for myself and for my House—sentiments that are founded on the old relations which have existed from far back times between our Houses, and have found expression in our time when we mourned a common loss at the graves of my dear parents and at the bier of the great Queen, my grandmother. But at the same time I regard your Majesty as the representative of the great English people, and the visit of your Majesty as the expression of good relations between our two nations. During the drive to the Castle, and later during our drive through the beautiful fields and peaceful woods, your Majesty was able to read both in the eyes of the inhabitants of Cassel and of their children, and in the faces of all who have had the honor and pleasure of seeing your Majesty, the feeling of grateful respect for this visit.

I ask your Majesty's leave to raise my glass to the health of your Majesty, of your Majesty's exalted Consort, the Queen, of the whole British Royal Family, and of your Majesty's people"

A sign of a change for the better in English social custom is contained in a despatch from London in the New York 'Times.' Heavy betting on horse racing is stated to be a thing of the past, and wine drinking has become, as Hamlet said it should be, a custom more honored in the breach than the observance. Facts are given to support these statements which are in happy contradiction to the fulminations of Father Vaughan and others, who condemn the vices of fashionable society. Betting and gambling are vices common among highly civilized people, but there is no surer sign of improvement in general morals than when they are seen to decline alone with the accompanying evil of drinking. It is also encouraging as an indication of improving manners, for the example of the upper class is always followed by the lower. When the proverb 'Drunk as a lord' ceases to have any application, the drunken tinker is deprived of an aristocratic excuse. 'You're drunk,' said a hobo to himself, clinging to a lamp-post, 'but then all gentlemen get drunk.' There is evidence on all sides that drinking is fast disappearing in polite society, largely owing to the influence of women. At one time, when a man got drunk, it was regarded as the amiable failing of a good-natured man; now it is counted an indication of physical and mental deterioration, or, as an eminent physician has lately said, a symptom of neurasthenia. In these days, when men must have all their wits about them in order to succeed in their undertakings, they will not risk impairing their powers and, knowing that drinking is a sign of disease, they will not indulge in it themselves nor encourage it in others. All may not see it in this light, but the number who do is increasing every day.

Quarrelsome Persons.

The mistress of the house always goes straight to the point, says a writer in Punch. "Why did you leave your last place?" she bluntly asked the applicant for housemaid's place.

"I couldn't stand the way mistress and master used to quarrel, mum."

"Dear me, did they quarrel very often?"

"Yes, mum when 'twasn't me an 'im, 'twas me an 'er."

A Schoolmaster's Rejoinder.

A keen retort is credited to the late Doctor Haig-Brown, master of Charterhouse. His brother-in-law, Doctor Porter, the master of Peterhouse, another famous English school, wrote to him to him, inquiring his precise meaning in a certificate that a boy's character was "generally" good.

"When I say generally," he replied, "I mean not particularly."
