CULTURE WITH UNCUT PAGES.

He made seven million dollars in a very little while.
And his portly wife grew haughty and his daughters put on style;
Then he built himself a palace and hung pictures on the walls,
There were rusty suits of armor placed in all the splendid halls,
There were "articles of vertu" heaped and hung in all the nooks
And the beautiful library was superbly stocked with books.
People praised him for his culture and his patronage of art,
He became a splendid figure in the noisy, busy mart;
At the horse shows and the functions where the social leaders vie
His fair daughters gleamed in jewels and his wife displayed her pride;
There were rumors that a marquis from somewhere across the sea
Had a notion to become a member of the family.
Then there came a slump; his margins seemed to quickly melt away;
Down the stocks he held went tumbling; things got darker every day;
He had made his money quickly, but more rapidly it went;
He became white-haired and haggard and his back was sadly bent,
And one morning in the papers there were headlines black and tall
Telling how he had been driven by his rivals to the wall.
At the sheriff's sale which followed there was many a sacrifice;
Pictures went for almost nothing, suits of armor at half price;
Bric-a-brac was sold as rubbish, rugs were shamelessly passed by,
But the prices that were freely offered for the books were high;
All the splendidly bound volumes—green and gold and red and blue—
Still had uncut leaves and truly were throughout as good as new.

A. C. Benson on "Humor."

(Putnam's Monthly for October.)

I have often felt, myself, that the time has come to raise another figure to the hierarchy of Christian graces. Faith, Hope and Charity were sufficient in a more elementary and barbarous age; but, now that the world has broadened somewhat, I think that an addition to the trio is demanded. A man may be faithful, hopeful and charitable and yet leave much to be desired. He may be useful, no doubt, with that equipment, but he may also be both tiresome and even absurd. The fourth quality that I should like to see raised to the highest rank among Christian graces is the Grace of Humor.

I do not think that Humor has ever enjoyed its due repute in the ethical scale. The possession of it saves a man from priggishness; and the possession of faith, hope and charity does not. Indeed, not only do these three virtues not save a man from priggishness—they sometimes will plunge him in irreclaimable depths of superiority. I suppose that when Christianity was first making itself felt in the world the one quality needful was a deep-seated and enthusiastic earnestness. There is nothing that makes life so enjoyable as being in earnest. It is not the light, laughter-loving jocosse people who have the best time in the world. They have a checkered career. They skip at times upon the hills of merriment, but they also descend gloomily at other times into the valleys of dreariness.

The King of Greece.

(Family Herald.)

King George of Greece was once walking in the vicinity of his palace when the sharp challenge of a sentry rang out, "Who goes there?" The king made no reply. Again came the sentry's demand, "Who goes there? Answer or I'll fire!" Still the king was silent. The next instant the silence was broken by the sharp crack of a rifle and King George felt a bullet plow through the sleeve of his overcoat. Then, to the terror of the sentry, he made himself known. Next day he sent for the man and after complimenting him on the way he had done his duty decorated the astonished soldier with the Order of Redemption.

Officers who at one time were in close touch with King George say that he used to compete at Greek amateur sports under the assumed name of George Papadouis," and was always so successful that spectators and participants began to suspect a masquerading professional. The feeling once became so strong that an attempt was made to mob the athlete monarch, who, rendered helpless by numbers, was obliged to reveal his identity to the police and trust them to smuggle him away.

King George is the poorest of all kings. His income is about $700 a day, which is nothing to one obliged to maintain the state and dignity of a king. He would be poorer still were it not for outside help. England, France and Russia each subscribe $20,000 a year toward his income.

The Insidious Crowfoot.

To prevent this bane of advancing years before going to bed, wash the face well, and then wet a cloth in hot water. Put this, as hot as you can it, under one eye at the place where crow's feet appear, and at the top of the cheek bone. Have another cloth soaking, and as the first cools, apply the second. Do this for five minutes to open the pores well. Wipe gently, and then, with the finger-tips, rub in any cold-cream you like, beginning at the corner, where the first finger of the left hand should be laid to hold the flesh firm. Then with the first two fingers of the right hand, apply the cream by stroking gently down, going in the direction of the side of the nose. Do this for ten times at least, and then, directly over the cheek-bone, rub with a circular motion.

This operation should consume certainly five minutes, and to finish cold water should be kabbled over the skin.

One cannot be too particular about removing every bit of dirt from the face. This is never a thing that can be done quickly, but the winds that will soon begin to blow severely make it more than ever important.

Hints to Housekeepers.

Planked sirloin steak baked on a cedar plank is tender and has a good flavor, and is enjoyed by many people, even though the best cooks say steak should never be baked. Prepared in this way it is more thoroughly done than broiled steak.

If the housewife wants her consommé to jelly, she should be sure to crack the bones and cut away the meat from them.

A flavorless pineapple can often be made more palatable by the addition of lemon juice. Tear the pulp of the fruit into pieces. Cover with a layer of granulated sugar and a little juice. Let it stand in this way for several hours.

If one's hands are inclined to perspire, it is well to lay the wet gloves in a sheet of tissue paper and then put them under a heavy book or weight for several hours. When they are taken out they will be soft and pliable again. One housekeeper says that she uses only the red part of rhubarb for cooking, cutting it up without removing the skin. Instead of stewing it, she bakes it in the oven with sugar and a little water.

Matting is greatly improved if gone over with a damp cloth once a week. Do not have the cloth wet, as water rots the matting.

Salt sprinkled over a low coal fire will greatly aid in curling feathers. Shake the plumes constantly and do not hold them too near the fire.

To revive withered flowers which have been packed or carried for some distance is not easy. The following plan has been found very satisfactory: Plunge the stalks into very hot water and allow them to stand till the water is cold. Then cut off the ends of the stalks and arrange the flowers in cold water. Thus treated flowers will last wonderfully in vases.

The following course of treatment will work wonders, it is said, with a wrinkled throat and flabby chin, if persisted in faithfully: First wash the chin and throat in hot water. Moisten the finger tips with good cold cream, and, starting with the left hand under the right ear, draw it briskly but firmly from ear to chin. Then take the right hand and repeat the movement from the left side. The pressure from chin to ear should be light, but under the chin the pressure should be firm. Ten minutes of this exercise should be followed by a douche of cold water, to which has been added a little stringent fluid, either a toilet water or tincture of benzoin.

A tickling cough, from any cause, is quickly stopped by Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. And it is so thoroughly harmless and safe, that Dr. Shoop tells mothers everywhere to give it without hesitation even to very young babies. The wholesome green leaves and tender stems of a lunghealing mountainous shrub, furnish the curative properties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. It calms the cough, and heals the sore and sensitive bronchial membranes. No opium, no chloroform, nothing harsh used to injure or suppress. Simply a resinous plant extract, that helps to heal aching lungs. The Spaniards call this shrub which the Doctor uses, "The Sacred Herb." Demand Dr. Shoop's. Take no other. Sold by all dealers.

The Monetary Times.

The Monetary Times will publish in the course of the next two or three weeks an issue of especial interest to the Maritime provinces. Sketches of several of the important centres in that part of the country will be included, together with many special articles and illustrations. Secretaries of the Boards of Trade and similar organizations, who desire some contribution concerning their district to appear in this issue, should communicate with me without delay. Fred W.
