Whole Leather for Furniture.

According to "Hide and Leather," leather is now being made from the hide and intestines of whales, and a company is engaged in utilizing every part of the animal that can be adapted to commercial purposes. Owing to the limited supply, however, whole leather is not likely to seriously affect the market in regular lines. Still net-meat whales would be required to furnish quite a good sized lot of leather.

Imagine twenty-five average cowhides spread out flat, each one overlapping the other and oblong in shape. It takes this number of cowhides to completely cover an average whale hide, whose surface is about 1,500 square feet. The tanning of whale hides is a certainty, as a company has been organized for tanning the hides of the whales they kill.

Whole leather is very tough and is said to have great wearing qualities, and may therefore be adapted to the covering of furniture, buggy tops and seats, and also automobile uses. It is also claimed that it can be used in the manufacture of boots and shoes, although this has never been tried.

Leather made from the intestines is thin and very tough. It will take color readily and is to be offered to glove manufacturers for making the long-sleeved gloves now so popular among women. This leather is much like kid skin to feel, color and pliability.

The company promoting this enterprise or industry has its own ships, and has established whaling stations in the arctic regions. In some instances contracts have been made with various countries for exclusive rights to capture and kill whales off their shores.

The ordinary-sized whale, when lying on the deck, measures about seventy feet in length and about eight feet through. The hides are taken off with spades and are of varying thickness, being thickest at the head and tapering down to the tail. The hide is put through a special process of tanning, and when ready for market is sold at a certain price per square foot, according to the thickness and quality of the hide. A square foot of the hide will weigh from two to five ounces and is prized as high as 50 cents per square foot.

In addition to the hides and intestines which it takes this company has found a market for whale meat, which is cut up and pickled, much the same as the packers handle their beef and hams. The meat is claimed to be edible and very tasty when cooked, similar to corned beef. None of it, however, is disposed of in this country, as the entire output goes to Japan on contracts.

They also obtain whalebone, whale oil and composition, which manufactured into whalebone, cannot be detected from the natural product. Every is secured from the teeth. This is solid, except for a small hole in the base of the tooth, as thick as your wrist and three or four inches long. In boiling down the blubber to reduce it to whale oil there is a fibrous substance left, about a ton to each whale, which silk manufacturers spin and use in making neckties and other wearing apparel. Everything not utilized in the making of some by-product is finally turned into fertilizer.

The stock of this company, par value $100, was placed on the market when the company was in its infancy and sold for $50 per share; $625 has been bid for this stock lately, but none was placed at this price. The net earnings of this company are fabulous, but exact figures cannot be given out. When considering that each ship nets an average of $5,900 per day and each whale nets about $5,000 the earnings are limited only by the number of whales captured.

The Victoria, B. C., Colonist, a supporter of the conservative cause, makes these sane reflections:

It seems abundantly clear that in the lifetime of the present parliament the United Kingdom will extend no tariff preference to the colonies. What will happen after the next general election we do not know but it seems foolish on the part of any section of the Canadian people to continue to advocate something which is not within present reach. The clamor raised by a number of prominent Canadians for the adoption of protection by the United Kingdom always seemed to the colonies like an interference with something that did not concern us.

Age of Farm Horses.

Observations in a number of localities widely scattered showed that the horses now at work on farms average pretty well along in years. This statement is based on observation and the inquiries which are received in regard to horses. And, further, it is a fair conclusion from the state of the horse market in the past five years. Owners have been under constant temptation to sell their young horses because prices have been good and the old ones would often serve a little longer. There is no surplus of good farm work horses—not fancy, but useful—right now, nor is there likely to be an over-supply until the temptation to sell off the young stock is relaxed. Money looks good to all of us, and while young horses sell as they do now there will be a tendency to let them go unless absolute necessity requires them to be kept.

Back So Lame Could Not Walk.

DOCTOR'S EFFORTS WERE IN VAIN, BUT CURE CAME WITH THE USE OF

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

It is not always the doctor's fault when he tries to give temporary relief instead of lasting cure. Sometimes patients demand it.

The thorough, far-reaching and lasting effects of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are well illustrated in this case, in contrast with the doctor's failure to even bring relief:

Mr. Geo. Tryon, Westport, Leeds Co., Ont., writes: "For two years I was completely laid up with lame back, and could neither walk nor ride. I tried many treatments and the doctor put on a fly blister, which only increased the suffering and did not do me the slightest good."

"A friend told me about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I had not finished the first box before I was completely cured. I have never had a lame back or kidney trouble since, and it has been the means of selling dozens of boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. We are never without them in the house and think there is no medicine like them."

The urea, uric acid and other poisonous waste substances which are left in the blood after the process of digestion has taken place are eliminated from the system by the action of the kidneys.

Failure of the kidneys to perform this important work of filtration means a poisoning of the whole system and consequently the most painful of diseases, such as Bright's disease, lumbago, backache and rheumatism.

The cause of such ailments are most promptly removed by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This great family medicine has a combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels which is not possessed by any similar preparation. The whole system is quickly and thoroughly cleansed and the vital organs invigorated by this treatment. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanston, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Romsey and the Danish Pirates.

The visitor to England who lands at Southampton finds himself within a few miles of the little town of Romsey, which on June 25 and the two following days will be celebrating the thousandth anniversary of its existence.

Romsey is a typical English town, "all in a flowery vale," with that famous trout stream, the Test, wandering through its meadows, and beneath its bridges, and the old gray abbey rising among its clustered red tiled roofs.

The beautiful park of Broadlands, the home of generations of statesmen, and especially associated with Viscount Palmerston, the sturdy premier of the sixties, lies at the very gates of the town, and an ideal spot beside the pleasant stream of the Test, sheltered by leafy woods, will be available. At this spot, each day, practically the whole population of Romsey will join in giving, somewhat in the spirit of the ancient mystery plays of the Middle Ages, a series of dramatic representations of the most important events in its long history of a thousand years.

In a country district like Hampshire there are to be found many links with the past. For instance, in one of the scenes, which will represent in a striking manner the looting and destruction of the Abbey of Romsey in 994 by King Sweyn and his marauding band of Danes, the ships in which the warriors will appear rowing up the river, will be copied from the remains of actual Danish pirate ships of King Alfred's time, the ribs of which are still to be seen sticking out of the mud on the opposite side of Southampton water.

This, perhaps, will be the peculiar attraction of the Romsey pageant. You will be taken through scenes of actual historical occurrence, on ground hallowed by the thread of those who took part in them, whether it be in some ancient Saxon or Norman scenes, or later ones which record the seizure of Romsey Abbey by Henry VIII., the pathetic expulsion of the nuns, and the remarkable saving of the abbey church from destruction by the townspeople purchasing it from the King.

In each case you will be looking at the picture of scenes which took place on the spot or in the immediate neighborhood. You can go straight from the pageant ground, and see in Broadlands gardens the fig trees which James I. planted to commemorate his visit. You will find preserved in the abbey church the deed of 1540, to which the royal seal is still attached, recording the selling of the church to the parishioners. Some of the actors in these far-off events will be direct lineal descendants of those whom they represent. The part of Henry St. Barbe, who entertained James I., for instance, will be taken by the present bearer of his name, Henry St. Barbe of Lymington.

Historical scenes of the pageant close with perhaps the most impressive of all, the progress (taken from a note in a contemporary diary) of Charles I. through Romsey as a prisoner, shortly before his execution.

The enthusiastic interest taken by the townspeople themselves, is immense. The costumes, numbering some 800, are in making by voluntary helpers, and the properties, armor, ornaments, brass and metal work of every kind, are the work of the mechanics and laborers, generously devoting their spare time to their construction. The whole town has been working in unity, all sects alike, to commemorate worthily the thousandth year since the foundation of the abbey (907) and to devote the proceeds, if any, to the complete restoration of the noble church.

No Chance For Criticism.

"On the way down here from up home I saw your advertisement in the paper," said "Ozzy" Hitchcock, as he entered the office of the New Notion Company in his Sunday suit, his boots creaking at every step. "I'm here in the city to get work."

"I hardly think you're just the man we need now," and the clerk in charge surveyed his caller with an unflattering gaze.

"You spoke of wanting a young man with a good address," and "Ozzy," in his loud, clear, distinct school voice. "I guess Laneville, New Hampshire, is as good as any you could find, and father has the only store in the place."

He Felt Complimented.

A man from Philadelphia, says a writer in the Public Ledger of that city, was visiting in a town of very few inhabitants. One day, when he was about to make a purchase, he discovered that he had exhausted his small change. The shopkeeper could not break the ten-dollar bill offered him, and the man went out in the main street to see how he might solve the difficulty. He asked several persons, but no one had the requisite amount for the bill. At last an old, white-haired, seedy negro came along. In sheer desperation the man said:

"Uncle, can you change a ten-dollar bill for me?"

"Uncle" looked dazed for the moment. Then his shambling figure straightened. With a doffing of the hat and a bow worthy of Chesterfield, he replied, with dignity:

"No, marse, I can't change no ten-dollar bill, but I done 'preciates the compliment jes' the same, sah."
