Record of the Winter's Weather.

According to the almanac spring superseded winter on the 20th inst. Some notes from records carefully kept by a correspondent are interesting. Of the 80 days from January 1st to March 20th 56 were marked "fair." There was snow on 15 of these 80 days, while rain was recorded on five of them. The river closed for the first during the first week of January, and on the 8th of the month, a "perfect arch of rainbow was seen in the North." Only on 13 days during this period did the thermometer record zero or below; the coldest days being Feb. 4th and 5th, with 26 degrees below. Five of the eleven Sundays were very disagreeable. The mildest day in January was the 22nd when it was 42 above zero. The 15th was the mildest day in February when the spring break-up threatened to come. Up to the 20th March had been unusually spring-like with little weather.
