

Colored Handkerchiefs.

It is indeed strange to see the colored handkerchief again in vogue, for the pure white linen has so long held sway that it takes time to become accustomed to what amounts almost to an innovation.

That women might depart from the plain white handkerchief was foreshadowed a year and more ago, when the men took to carrying handkerchiefs marked off in squares by some color. Then followed, also for men, handkerchiefs with a colored edge and some with a band of color, within a colored hem. To-day, both for men and women, one sees handkerchiefs entirely of color, save for the white which appears as the background for the colored design in the border.

For women there are pink handkerchiefs and blue handkerchiefs. These have a border of the same color or of white with a figure in color. The polka dot is especially popular for the border design.

Another innovation in handkerchiefs is in the matter of size. Usually a woman's handkerchiefs measure about twelve inches square, but this summer has seen a return of the handkerchief of our grandmothers. A ring handkerchief, it was called in olden times, for it was usually carried by being fastened thru the finger ring. Now it is called a glove handkerchief, because milady tucks it in the glove. These are six inches square, very sheer, and almost invariably lace trimmed, the some are seen with only a narrow hemstitched border.

With our grandmothers the favorite shape for the ring handkerchief was round, and it was a filmy creation. Indeed some of those ring handkerchiefs of the long ago, long treasured, are to-day doing service as a bit of lace trimming to the hat or neckwear.

Speaking of neckwear, there is another reason why there is rejoicing among women over the entrance of the colored handkerchief. It is quite possible now to find a handkerchief to match almost any gown and the dainty follower of fashion is able to fashion most fascinating jabots and cravats and turnovers in colors by using a handkerchief, thereby saving herself any amount of thread drawing and hemstitching. All that is required is a clever touch here and there a few stitches and the natty piece of neckwear is a thing accomplished.

Became A Hero.

In Watterson's "History of the Spanish-American War" there is a fine story. "Talk about your Generals!" said the regular. "Chaffee's the old boy for my money. I found out what he was at El Caney. My company was at work digging trenches, and while we were finishing up, one of the Spaniards began to fire, and the bullets sang their pretty tunes nigh to our heads. Well, there was a kid in the company that couldn't have been over eighteen. Never ought to have let him enlist at all. He was always complaining and kicking, and at the first fire down he went flat on his face, and lay there. One of the men kicked him, but he didn't stir. Then along came Chaffee, cool and easy, and sees the kid. 'Hello, there!' says Chaffee. 'What's the matter, you fellow down there? Get up and fight with your company.' 'No; I can't,' whines the kid. 'Can't?' says Chaffee, hauling the boy up. 'What's the matter with you that you can't? Are you hurt?' 'No, sir,' says he. 'I'm scairt. I'm afraid of getting hit.' 'Well, you're a fine soldier!' says the General. Then he looked at the boyish face of the lad, and his face kind of softened. 'I suppose you can't help it,' he said. 'It ain't so much your fault. I'd like to get hold of the fellow that took you into the army.' I suppose any other General would have sent the boy to the rear in disgrace, and that would have been the end of it; but Chaffee stood there, with the bullets kiyying around him, beside the boy, who had crouched down again, and thought, with his chin in his hand.

"By and by he put his hand on the boy's shoulder. 'There isn't as much danger as you think for,' said he. 'Now get up and take your gun and fight, and I'll stand here by you.' The boy got up, shaking like a leaf, and fired his first shot pretty near straight in the air. 'That's pretty high,' says the General. 'Keep cool, and try again.' Well, in three minutes that scairt kid was fighting like a veteran and cool as a cucumber, and when he saw it, the General started on: 'You are all right now, my boy,' he said. 'You'll make a good soldier.' 'God bless you, sir!' said the youngster. 'You saved me from worse than death,' and he was pretty close to crying when he said it. After a while the order came to retire from the trench, and we had just to collar that young fellow and haul him away by the neck, to get him to retreat with the company. In the rest of the fights there was not a better soldier in the company.

Tips and Their Recovery.

Tipping is becoming one of the world's worries, but the recent decision of a Liverpool court shows that there is a limit to the evil and a chance of recovery when it becomes unendurable. The steward of an Atlantic liner exacted $35 in tips from a passenger and asked for more, till the passenger, becoming aroused, demanded every penny back. The upshot was that the money was recovered and the company dismissed the steward, who had been in its service for twenty years. The latter sued the company because it had confidentially given his record to another company and he could not get employment. It is the policy of the companies to stamp out the excesses of tipping.

It is evident that $35 is too much to exact of passengers for services for which a ship's employees are already paid by the company. The levy of such basksheesh on a systematic and wholesale scale for trifling extra services adds too materially to the cost of a passage. Many ship stewards, it is stated, by the steady saving of tips, accumulate in a few years enough capital to establish a hotel and live happy ever after. Evidence to this effect was brought out at the trial. The court held that the company had a right to report the "unjust steward" to another company, such communication being privileged. This decision will not, of course, stop tipping on Atlantic liners or elsewhere. The millennium will see the practice still in vogue ashore as well as afloat. But the court's ruling will serve a useful purpose in checking excessive demands, and will encourage the worm to "turn" sometimes.—Baltimore Sun.

Letting People do as They Please.

(Penelope, in Boston Advertiser.)

I sometimes wonder why it is that we don't let other people have their luxuries as they want them without putting our opinion up against theirs. We know, of course, what bores us, and we seem to take it for granted that that must be the very thing our friends should avoid. On the other hand, we see people who do the strangest things for pleasure in our opinion, of course, and we want so much to straighten out the world for them, and to introduce them to things they would really enjoy, that we end by being bigger bores than any occupation which we could imagine. I suppose it is human nature.

Not long since a professional woman went away for the summer to a place where she thought herself unknown, but her reputation was ahead of her. One afternoon when she was quietly sewing on the verandah of her boarding place her landlady joined her, and begged her to put up her sewing.

Now there was nothing that delighted the busy woman more than a moment so idle that in it she might take up some really womanish occupation and leave the cares of a public life behind her, so she only remarked that she liked to sew.

"Yes," remarked the unbelieving landlady, "I suppose saying so helps you to darn a lot of stockings, but I know just how hard you work and how worn out you were when you came here, and if I was any relation to you I'd hide your sewing."

Doubtless it was well meant interference on the part of the woman who weekly did the stockings for a family of five, but from the point of view of the woman who found a pleasure in her needle which she could enjoy but semi-occasionally, it must have been almost enough to drive her to a new boarding place.

It is fortunate that we are not all born with the same tastes, and yet the truth of that same fact is one we are slow to learn.

"Say, this is straight soda," said the arrival at the Maine resort. "Didn't you see me wink?"

"Of course I did replied the clerk.
