Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists, small free trial bottles of Dr. Sloop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Sloop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing curable, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of food, containing moribund. But that article, when passed through the test will be found, rather than advance it. Dr. Sloop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing anti-pyric, and is in beautiful nickel capped glass jars. The following agencies take Oil, Eucalyptus, Turpentine, and other oils incorporated into a variety of ointments, Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Sloop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means use, internally, Dr. Sloop's Restorative. It cures indigestion, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, biliousness, bad taste, etc. Every call for Dr. Sloop's Restorative. For complicated catarrh only, the nose and throat nothing else, however, need be used but

Neil Dornin's Hard Luck.

There was the case of bachelor Neil Dornin, who, when he undertook to become a benedict, found himself overmatched. He rightly deserved this, for he was a niggardly, near-going fellow, any way. By the strong recommendation of his old mother, he was induced to accept a strange woman from another parish, "who had the name of money" and who was offered to him by Peggy the matchmaker. When he married her he discovered that her reputed fortune had to be divided by four to yield actuality. On the day after he brought her home his mother killed a large duck for dinner in honor of the occasion. It was intended that the duck should be the family two days. The new wife was left at home to cook the dinner, whilst Neil and his mother went to their work in the field. When they came again at dinner-time no duck was to the fore.

"Where's the duck?" said Neil's mother. "I ate it," said the new wife satisfiedly. A convenient chair saved Neil from collapse on the floor. But he looked at the new wife open mouthed while he gasped. "Ate the duck!" said the mother astounded.

"You don't mean to say that you could eat a whole duck?"

"Troth could I—and more if I had it."

Poor Neil lost consciousness, and when he revived again—so the story goes—could say nothing but, "And more if I had it!" The neighbors came in and asked Neil what was the matter with him, and he only replied, "And more if I had it!" The doctor was hurriedly sent for, but he could get nothing from Neil save "And more if I had it!" The priest, too, came and tried to reason with him. But to all he said Neil only shook his head and replied, "And more if I had it!" Then he took to his bed, dying (so runs the story, told by an old woman who knew Neil,) and the new wife, who evidently had all her senses, got pens, ink, and paper, and sat down to write Neil's will.

She said, "Neil, I suppose you will leave the farm to me, your dearly beloved wife?"

"And more if I had it!" Neil said.

So she set that down.

"You will be leaving me the farm-stock, I expect, likewise?"

"And more if I had it!"

"And all cash in your possession, and cash comin' to you?"

"And more if I had it!"

"All other properties and belonging of yours, Neil, I suppose you will leave to your dearly beloved wife likewise?"

"And more if I had it!"

And she had Neil put his hand to the pen, making his mark. Neil remarked as he did so, "And more if I had it!" Thus, to the dire disappointment of all his relatives, she settled herself sole legatee of Neil, to whom, however she gave decent waking and burial. —Seumas MacManus in December Lippincott's.

REPEAT it:—"Shiloh's Cure will always cure my coughs and colds."

His Time Was Up.

"I canna get over it," a Scotch farmer remarked to his wife. "I put a two shillin' piece in ta plate at kirk this morn instead o' ma usual penny!"

The beadle had noticed the mistake, and also the frightened face of his old friend, who had not the courage to retake the coin as the old-fashioned ladle-like spoon was carefully passed over the head to the next pew, and one penny after another was dropped into the bowl.

The old farmer sat in silence and said nothing. The old beadle allowed him to miss the plate for twenty-four consecutive Sundays.

On the twenty-fifth Sunday the farmer again ignored the collection plate, but the old beadle steadied the ladle in front of him, and in a loud, tragic whisper said hoarsely:

"Your time's up noo, Sandy!"—Cleveland Leader.

Cost of Mammoth Skeleton.

After a journey lasting six months and costing £1,700 the skeleton of a mammoth found last January by some Yakuts in the sandy bed of the River Sangar-Yurach has reached St. Petersburg, says the London Globe.

The skeleton was found one hundred and twenty miles from the Arctic Ocean. The Governor of Yakutsk telegraphed at once to the Imperial Academy of Science which sent off straightway a mission to fetch the interesting discovery to the capital. The specimen now brought to light is not of remarkable size, but some parts of its carcass have been preserved, which so far have not been found; unfortunately, the teeth are absent, and also some of the softer portions of the body. The carcass only weighs 257 stone and it took six days for the remains to be prepared and treated properly by experts, who had to work in an ordinary tent at a temperature of 30 degrees of cold.

The proboscis is found now for the first time in an uninjured state, it has been put into spirits. The return journey to Bulun, a distance of twelve hundred miles, took a fortnight, and the skeleton was carried on reindeer sleighs; from Bulun the skeleton was carried along the River Lena to Schegalov by carts to Yakutsk. It will take at least a year to mount the skeleton in the Zoological Museum here.

A merchant who had an unusually tender heart and a shrewd advertising sense harmonized the two in a peculiar way. He gathered up the stray kittens and puppies, put them in the hands of a motherly woman who was in needy circumstances and had them put in the best of condition. After being properly fed and cared for for several weeks they showed points of beauty that would not have suspected of the forlorn creatures that had been wanderers only a week before. The want column was next called into use and a brief ad offered a kitten or a pup to those who desired it and would give it kind treatment. The ad ended with "Address box 345, general delivery." Numerous requests for the pets were received, and in every case one would be decked with a neat ribbon with a card attached saying, "Compliments of Jones, the Furniture Man." The advertisement was a good one and of little expense, as the recipients of the gifts had wanted them and were not aware of who the advertiser was until the very attractive little stranger was delivered to their door, always to stay, because they wanted it, and as a permanent reminder of "Jones, the Furniture Man." In addition to its value as an advertisement that man has a reward coming from somewhere from a humanitarian standpoint.

A prominent merchant once said that a rifle ball weighing a hundred grains would carry further and hit harder than an ounce and a quarter of bird shot, and he used it as an example of the advantage of power of concentration. The man who has one object and aim in the conduct of his business, and who keeps persistently driving at that one particular thing is going to get more results than the man who is scattering his efforts and trying out first one policy and then another and not concentrating on any one of them.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.
