

A Prized Cough Cure

"I have not been without a bottle of Coltsfoote Expectorant in the house for over nine years. At that time I procured it for a bad cold I had. It worked such wonders then that it has been a household remedy ever since, and we will have no other for coughs and colds—it is so pleasant to take, and all of my children look for it as soon as they get a cold at all. Nearly all of them have been subject to croup, and that's when I find Coltsfoote Expectorant useful. You are welcome to use this testimonial as you wish."

The Devil's Best Friend.

I am aware that there is a prejudice against any man engaging in the manufacture of alcohol. I believe, gentlemen, to a certain extent it demoralizes those who drink it. I believe from the time it issues from the distillery until it empties into the hall of death, dishonors and crimes, that it demoralizes everybody that touches it from its source to its end. I do not believe anybody can contemplate the subject without becoming prejudiced against the liquor crime. All we have to do, gentlemen, is to think of the wrecks on either bank of the river of death, the suicides, of the insanity of poverty, of the little children tagging at the faded dress, of weeping and despairing wives asking for bread, of the men of genius it has wrecked, men struggling with imaginary serpents produced by this devilish thing. And when you think of the jails, the alms houses, asylums, of the prisons, of the scaffolds upon either hand, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against that damning stuff that is called alcohol. Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength and in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the dotting mother, extinguishes natural affection, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hope, and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, father fiends, and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence, and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, poverty, disease and crime. It fills your jails, supplies your alms houses, and demands asylums. It engenders controversies, quarrels and cherishes riots. It is the life blood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman and support of the incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, and esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligations and reverences, fraud and infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and slanders innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helplessness offspring, helps husbands to massacre wives, and helps children to grind the paricidal axe. It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God, and despises Heaven. It summons witnesses, nurses perjury, defies the jury box and judicial crime. It bribes voters, corrupts elections, pollutes institutions and endangers our government. It degrades the citizens, it debases our legislature, dishonors the statesman and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not happiness; and with the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and unsatisfied with havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputation, and wipes out national honor—it curses the world and laughs at the ruin. It does all that and more—it murders the soul. It is the sum of all villainies, the father of all crimes, the mother of all abominations, the devil's best friend and God's worst enemy.—Bob Ingersoll.

Little Harry, who was spending a summer in the mountains, stood one day caressing a Scotch collie. The young man who owned the dog, seeing the boy's admiration for the collie, asked:

"Have you any animals at home, Harry?" At this the little lad replied, after pondering a moment:

"Yes, we have flies."

A German View of Naval Supremacy.

If has for many years been the policy of the British Government to maintain a naval force equal or superior to that which could be sent to sea by any two powers which might form a league against Britain. How adherence to this policy is viewed in Germany is well stated in a treatise recently written by Admiral Siegel, of the German navy. Admiral Siegel endeavors to ascertain whether a reasonable and consistent answer can be given to the rival claims of Britain, which insists on maintaining a material supremacy in warships over any other nation, partly owing to her traditions, partly from a desire to be free from military burdens, and to the German contention that the empire of the Kaiser cannot rest content until it can meet every other nation on the sea on terms of equality. Arguing from the contrast in the relative position of armaments on sea and land, he asks why equilibrium should not equally be maintained on both, without the predominance of one power. He considers that the armies of the five great powers of the Continent are so nearly equal in strength that none of these States, in case of war with one another, could be sure in advance of being victorious. The consequence is a balance among the military powers which tends to be and for some time has been stable. On the sea very different conditions prevail. Here Great Britain has such a preponderance that no other power in the world can vie with her. Such a permanent condition of affairs Admiral Siegel suggests to be unusual; the thought that there exists and will exist during our historical period one power which is able to cut off at any moment any other single power from sea-traffic is disturbing and carries with it some anxiety. On land, such an overwhelming predominance would be met and has been and frequently met by a combination of others against it. Why should a different principle apply to the sea? "As things stand," he says, "the freedom of the sea for the States of Europe depends solely upon the English people's love of peace and the British Government's wisdom being strong, enough to avoid misuse of this maritime strength and the oppression of the other Maritime States."

Said To Be Fine.

Few people here know that you can cure that dread American disease, Rheumatism, with just common, every day drugs found in any drug store. The prescription is so simple that any one can prepare it at home at small cost. It is made up as follows: Get from any good prescription pharmacy, Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. These are all simple ingredients, making an absolutely harmless home remedy at little cost.

Rheumatism, as every one knows, is a symptom of deranged kidneys. It is a condition produced by the failure of the kidneys to properly filter or strain from the blood the uric acid and other matter, which, if not eradicated, either in the urine or through the skin pores, remains in the blood, decomposes and forms about the joints and muscles, causing the untold suffering and deformity of rheumatism.

This prescription is said to be a splendid healing, cleansing and invigorating tonic to the kidneys, and gives almost immediate relief in all forms of bladder and urinary troubles and backache.

Smoking.

Letter in London Saturday Review.)

The old school of smokers do neither themselves nor any one else harm. A smoker of this class is addicted to a habit which if exercised with moderation is in many ways a comfort where with to pass smoothly over the rough places in life. He draws the soothing smoke into his mouth and puffs it out again in contemplative fashion, at the expense of neither his companions nor the carpet beneath his feet. Here we have the cultured smoker, but unfortunately there is a declension from this type never met with in polite society, who does little harm to himself, but has great potentiality for injuring other people. He begins early in life. He smokes to expectorate and later expectorates to smoke. The essential feature of the two classes of smokers is a very simple but all-important one. Smoke passes into their mouths—"thus far and no further."

It is much otherwise with the third and last class to which I would refer. He is the "inhaler" pure and simple, to whom the smoke brings no joy unless that smoke is carried to the intermost recesses of his lungs. One has heard the remark that cigarettes are not worth smoking unless inhaled, and it is to this sub-habit that the cigarette owes its popularity. It ranks with stimulants. Many young men cannot get through the day on less than twenty, are miserable when the supply is cut off and will do much to replenish it. Unfortunately it is this last class that the majority of our young generation are trending, and here lies the danger which may be averted. Who has not seen at one time or another the pale-faced, poorly nourished boy sending forth clouds of smoke from his lungs, and to this end who has not heard the appeal or seen the scramble for what is vulgarly described as the "fag?" Proverbially many things end in smoke, but here begins in smoke a force which stunts our youth, calls on him to live faster these fast days, and that at the expense of his finer moral controlling functions.

What Millionaires Acknowledge.

Two of the richest men in the United States, Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller, have both declared within the past few weeks that great wealth brings more responsibility than happiness, that beyond a fair nest egg for old age man really needs but a small amount of money, and that the great teachers of their fellows in all departments of human activity forego the opportunities of acquiring fortunes for the sake of doing humanity some valuable service.

These remarks may sound more or less inconsistent coming from men who have exerted their every energy to amass vast sums of gold, but these financial kings now speak toward the ends of their lives; they see that money alone does not mean happiness, and do not hesitate to tell the world the conclusions they have reached.

Speaking in his latest volume, "Problems of To-Day," on this subject, Carnegie says, after paying a high tribute to the life work of professional men, to all kinds of teachers, authors, etc.:

"All these men are quite right, for beyond a competence for old age, which need not be great and may be very small, wealth lessens rather than increases human happiness. Millionaires who laugh are rare. The deplorable family quarrels which so often afflict the rich, generally have their rise in sordid difference about money. The most miserable men, as old age approaches, are those who have made money-making their god; like flies on the wheel, these unfortunates fondly believed they were really driving it, only to find when tired and craving rest that it is impossible for them to get off, and they are lost—plenty to retire upon but nothing to retire to, and so they end as they began, striving to add to their useless hordes, passing into nothingness, leaving their money behind for heirs to quarrel over, only because they cannot take it with them—a melancholy end, much less enviable than that of their poorer fellows."

Perkins-Tracey.

A pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Tracey of Tracey Mills on Wednesday, Dec. 2, when their eldest daughter married Harry W. Perkins of Centreville. The bridal pair were unattended, but the bride, dressed in white, with veil and orange blossoms, played her part with becoming grace.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. H. Johnson, at 11.30 a. m., in the presence of some forty guests, and at the close all partook of an excellent wedding breakfast.
