

"I can truthfully say that I believe that, but for the use of your Emulsion I would long since have been in my grave. I was past work—could not walk up-hill without coughing very hard."

THIS, and much more was written by Mr. G. W. Howerston, Clark's Gap, W. Va. We would like to send you a full copy of his letter, or you might write him direct. His case was really marvelous, but is only one of the many proofs that is the most strengthening and re-vitalizing preparation in the world. Even in that most stubborn of all diseases (consumption) it does wonders, and in less serious troubles, such as anemia, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh, or loss of flesh from any cause the effect is much quicker.

THE AMATEUR CYNIC.

BY GRIFFIN BARRY.

They were talking of love, standing meanwhile in a crowded railway station. It was an odd place for such a subject, but the tall young man had hooked his junior by the arm, and seemed determined to make him change his mind about it then and there.

"Never think of marriage until you forget what your brown old meerschaum is for, or they tax bachelors out of existence," he said, as if he meant it.

The boy was nearly angry. "You talk like the cynic's calendar," he said. "I suppose you'll tell me next that you never thought anything about what kind of a girl you'll marry!"

"I'd just as soon speculate on the figure on my monument," the other said, quite seriously.

The younger looked up, astounded at his friend's cynicism.

"Piffle! I'm going, anyway. She's waiting," he cried, making for a big iron gate about to close.

"Jim, stay here. Think what you're doing!"

The tall fellow held the other gently back, talking down into his ear. When their faces were near together, it could be seen that they were brothers. Before the pair reached the gate, it clanged to suddenly, and the train behind it moved slowly off.

II.

Six months later the elder of the two attended his first house-party. It was in the country, where the snow was deep, and there was no getting away from the house full of people. Lawrence Haight made ten years of rather lonely hard work an excuse for keeping clear of the other sex; but what he thought was boredom passed into excitement eventually became deep content at the slightest sign of favor from one guest.

Of course, when he fell in love, he fell deep. From something of a hermit, he became very much of a lover. People said he fed out of Gretchen Wall's hand, and it was nearly true.

Matters moved quickly to the proposal.

He made it in the garden at sunset, for love had touched him with poetry, and he recited all the verse he knew to help out what he was trying to say. The poets had figured it all out ahead, he said, and put it far better than he could; but even with trimmings from the poets, she laughed at the idea. First, she dodged the issue by saying that she was not the marrying kind of girl. Then she declared that they had been merely playing a game, with chances even on both sides. Then she grew serious, and told the truth.

"You are the only man whose proposal I ever cared to hear," she said.

"Yes? Then I'll make it again and again until you know it by heart."

"But I only wanted to refuse you. You see, I imbibed your views on marrying one day last summer, when you were talking to your brother in the Grand Central Station. And I have taken pains to see that you should be rejected. You interested me, and I thought you needed the experience."

"Did Jimmy tell you what I said? I'll wring his neck!"

"Don't. He didn't tell me. I was standing at your elbow at the moment."

III.

Lawrence Haight retired in good order. He took his hurt pride back to his law-office, and almost forgot it in work. He was that kind of man; he could drown himself in a brief and forget what season of the year it was outside his office window.

But Gretchen Wall was not that kind of woman. She would have liked to talk further on matrimony in the abstract, only Lawrence had not tarried long after his rejection. Even his brother neglected her. Jimmy used to come often for good advice and the new jokes, but of late he had stayed away. Then a letter with an Arizona postmark came. At the end of sixteen pages about gold and opportunity, Jimmy had written:

Out here I have remembered something you said about Lawrence being a cynic. Don't you believe it; that's all put on! He confessed as much to me the week after he held your sex up to scorn in the Grand Central to prevent me marrying the wrong girl. He said she was the wrong girl at the time; and as she ran away with a man in the same chorus three days after I broke my date with her, I guess she was. But as Larry's recent letters hint at somebody who won't stay out of his thoughts, he's forgotten all the cynicism he never had, anyway, and . . .

All she could do was to mail a humble request for a call, and run the risk of being the rejector rejected; but after he had taken her in his arms, he said he wasn't cynic enough for that.

The Spring busy Man's.

A seventy-two thousand dollar a year man—Hugh Chalmers—tells "How to hire, train and supervise men" in the April number of Busy Man's Magazine. It is a topic full of inspiration and narrated in a bright, snappy style by a salesman who, at twenty-nine years of age, capitalized himself at a million dollars annually and sold his services to a company employing five thousand persons, as well as a force of five hundred salesmen. Another article of timely interest is one on "Canadians and Imperial Titles," by J. M. McConnell, who speaks of the change in sentiment and attitude with which decorations are now viewed in the Dominion as compared with the feeling that existed some years ago. "Canadian Pleasure Parks," is also a seasonable contribution from the pen of G. W. Cooper. Splendid cuts are presented of several beauty spots in different cities. The April issue of Busy Man's Magazine contains many other racy articles on political and commercial affairs, system and business, life stories of successful people and men and events in the public eye. It is artistically illustrated and makes an excellent travelling companion for Easter-tide or a welcome visitor to the home during the present holiday period.

Spain's exports of cork and cork articles exceeded in value $8,800,000 in 1907.

The Okanagan.

To the Editor of The Dispatch:

Dear Sir,—Believing that some of your people will have the Western Fever this Spring, in fact I have heard of some strong symptoms of it already, I take the liberty of addressing some of your citizens on the very important matter of western emigration. Regrettable mistakes have been made in the past and are being made every year by those who start for the West with very meagre information or knowledge of the location or conditions that obtain at their destination; things have not been what they expected, possibly the picture they had in mind was over-drawn or one-sided, disappointment and loss has ensued in some cases which might have been avoided if a little more caution had been exercised. British Columbia has such a variety of soil, climate, and general physical conditions that The Easterner who cannot be suited somewhere in this favored Province would not likely be suited this side of the Garden of Eden. There are difficulties, lacks, and in some cases real hardships connected with the settlement and progress of every young community or district and it is better that these things should be recognized and taken hold of with energy and hope of the future conditions. There is not a title of some of the difficulties that our ancestors in the Eastern Provinces had to cope with to be met in the west, yet we haven't a bad record to offer many of your people at present. Those who have plenty of means can probably find in British Columbia as happy and pleasant environments as can be found anywhere in the world.

So much of British Columbia is standing on end that the country is simply a mass of valleys, paralleling, crossing or angling each other. There are radical differences, within a short distance, of soil, climate, rain and snow fall, and other respects. Those who wish to follow avocations connected with the tillage and products of the soil have a large variation to choose from and before settling in any one section should know something of the other sections. This knowledge is really imperative to those who wish to make a good success. Some parts are particularly favored for mixed farming, some for dairy purposes, some for special lines of fruit and others for vegetables. The intending settler should know what he wants and then look over the whole field or a large part of it. I would suggest that a few of your citizens make a tour of this province together, as representatives of those of your people who wish to come west. They will see it with new Brunswick eyes and be able to give your people a fair conception of what we have and what it means to become residents of British Columbia. We believe we have a magnificent country and that its possibilities are beyond the most sanguine expectations of the people of Canada. But we believe it would be a grave mistake for any of your people to purchase land in B. C. without seeing it either through their own eyes or through the eyes of New Brunswick people, who have no financial interest in such transactions. Neglect of these precautions may lead to much disappointment and do our country unnecessary harm. In the matter of fruit growing British Columbia offers great inducements, but the conditions and localities vary so much that intending settlers should not decide on their location without some knowledge of the other places. This is the country for the specialist in Fruit Culture; the best success is made by those who concentrate their attention on what they can grow to the best advantage. Pretty nearly the whole country will grow fruit but in particular varieties some districts are not in it with other places. It's the high grade article that brings the big money. There is no other agricultural pursuit so profitable as fruit growing, in our opinion, but no other occupation requires more intelligent effort or keener discernment. The publication of returns is not always satisfactory as only the best are usually published. For example a grower in the Okanagan sold his crop of 1908 on the trees for $3000. He has about 600 trees. Another grower did not pay expenses with 25 acres of trees.

Satisfactory explanations can be given of these and many other cases of contrast. The great possibilities of our country can be demonstrated in actual results but of course some have not succeeded as well as others. It is no disparagement of any other part of the province for Okanagan people to say that they have the cream of the country in the fruit line, and taken as a whole the Okanagan Valley presents a variety of opportunities in mixed farming and fruit growing possessed by no other section of the Province. It is one thing to grow a good article and an entirely different thing to grow it in quantities. I am credibly informed that there are over one and a quarter millions of fruit trees set out in this Valley, while about 550,000 is said to be about the number of fruit trees set out in the Coast Districts. I am sending you under separate cover several photographs of portions of the Valley which no doubt your people will be glad to look at. It would take a dozen pictures to adequately represent the 4000 acres of young orchards of Summerland, all of which are the result of five years labor and growth. In one of the pictures the Okanagan College is seen on a flat on the side of the mountain at the top of the picture. I will be pleased to give further information if desired. I may be permitted to say of myself that I have been engaged in the commercial end of the Fruit and Produce business for some years in this Valley. Mr. H. T. Warner, of Digby, N. S. has resided in Vernon and has been over a very considerable portion of this Valley. I am sure he will be pleased to answer any inquiries from your people. The word Okanagan is pronounced as if spelled 'Okanaugan' with the accent on the 3rd syllable 'au', Vernon B. C. Mch. 20, 1909. THOS. G. WANLESS.
