HEADQUARTERS FOR
Cream Separators

—AT—

MacDougall's

Auction and Commission Store

I would like to ask the farmers a question—Why should I buy a Cream Separator from MacDougall—because he has had eight years' experience and knows something about the mechanism and make-up of a Cream Separator. If you buy a Separator from me I am here to look after your wants. It is my intention to make the Separator a special line and will keep on hand other extra parts for any machine that I handle. I claim that I can sell on a smaller commission than the man who has to travel and pay expenses for himself and horse. Be sure and see me before purchasing and I will save you dollars. Come in and look over the different makes.

Mr Gladstone and the Late British Sovereign

The last person whose dead body lay in state in Westminster Hall before that of Edward VII was William Ewart Gladstone, who lived and died a Commoner. His death took place three years before King Edward came to the throne, but between the older and the younger man there had existed for years a very warm personal friendship, to which a contributor to The Westminster Gazette calls attention:—

There was no shadow over the intercourse between the Prince of Wales and the Minister, and there are many charming little word-pictures in the journals and letters which Lord Morley's Life of Gladstone has made accessible.

Their first meeting, perhaps, was in the year 1845, when the Prince was little more than three years old. In January of that year Gladstone, writing to his wife on his return from Windsor, mentions that the Queen has given him a private print of the Prince of Wales, "Also," he continues, "she brought the little people through the corridor yesterday after luncheon, where they behaved very well, and she made them come and shake with me. The Prince of Wales has a very good countenance." The friendship inaugurated by this handshake closed only with death.

Twenty years later, within a few days, Gladstone was suing for an audience with a new Prince, the baby son of the Prince of Wales. "I have been most pertinacious," he writes from Osborne in 1865, "about seeing the baby Prince. I tried to make the request twice to the Princess, but I think she did not understand my words. Determined not to be beat, I applied to the Prince who acceded with glee; but I don't know what will come of it." He goes on as in many other letters, to record the good sense of the Prince's conversation on foreign affairs. From the first, this aptitude, which was to have so great a bearing on the peace of Europe, seems to have been noted. He has certainly much natural intelligence" is an entry a few years later.

In 1871, shortly before the Prince's illness, they met at Abergeldie. The Prince of Wales had his usual pleasant manners. After dinner he invited me to play whist.

I said, 'For love, sir?' He said, Well, shillings and half a crown on the rubber,' to which I submitted. The Prince has apparently an immense whist memory and plays well accordingly."

In January, 1883, they were at Cannes together, and "the Prince as usual paid him kindly attentions," which were repeated a few months later at Sandringham, where, he notes, "Reception kinder if possible even than before."

A curious incident in the same year marks Gladstone's high sense of propriety in all the observances of Royal etiquette. "I am much shocked," he writes to the Prince, "at an omission which I made last night in failing to ask your Royal Highness' leave to be the first to quit Lord Alcester's agreeable party in order that I might attend to my duties in the House of Commons."

In the Journal of 1885 is another reference. Much conversation with the Prince of Wales, who was hearty and pleasant even beyond his wont."

In 1887 there was another visit to Sandringham and another reference to the kindness with which he was received; and two years later, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of Gladstone's marriage, he records the receipt of a "beautiful and splendid gift" from the Prince and Princess.

Very touching are the words in which Gladstone informed the Prince of his approaching retirement in 1894.

"In thus making it known to your Royal Highness I desire to convey, on my own and my wife's part, our fervent thanks for the unbounded kindness which he have at all times received from your Royal Highness, and not less from the beloved Princess of Wales. The devotion of an old man is little worth, but if at any time there be the smallest service which, by information or suggestion, your Royal Highness may believe me capable of rendering, I shall remain as much at your command as if I had continued to be an active and responsible servant of the Queen." These are very noble and pathetic words, and the Prince acknowledged them suitably, recording at the same time how greatly he and the Princess had, for a long number of years, valued Mr Gladstone's friendship.

On May 25, 1898, the sealed coffin containing the mortal remains of the great statesman was brought to Westminster Hall to lie in state, and the Prince performed the last offices of friendship when he was among those whose who bore the pall at the funerals in the Abbey.

Friendships between Prince and Minister as pure and unaffected as this was, are rare in history. It is not the least among the virtues of Edward the Peace maker that he was able to attract to himself and to keep for fifty years the devotion of one of the noblest spirits that ever breathed.

Esquimau Candy.

Tallow is the Esquimau's candy. It is put up in bright red packages made out of the feet of water fowl. The women cut off the red feet of this bird, which is called the dove-kie, draw out the bones and blow up the skin so as to make pouches which they fill with the reindeer tallow for their little folk. None of the food that the Esquimaux eat seems very inviting to us, but they are extremely fond of it and are very apt to over-eat. It is said by explorers who have gone into Greenland that it is no uncommon sight to see an Esquimaux man who has eaten an enormous meal of the raw, frozen fish of the reindeer, seal or walrus, lying on his back and eating blubber until he cannot move.
