The "mother lode" theory is common among gold miners. When they find gold in valleys or in the bed of a stream, they argue that since it must have been conveyed thither from an important vein in the hills or mountains where the stream has its source, search will reveal the mother lode. Many a miner has abandoned a good placer mine in the hope of discovering what might be called the goose that lays the golden eggs. An organization of Dawson miners and business men, assisted by the Canadian government, is now engaged in a search for the source of the gold found in the Yukon River and its tributaries. All the gold bearing streams about Dawson rise in a domeshaped hill, which is planned to bore it clear through. Some small gold bearing veins have been found already.

GRANT'S "DISOBEDIENCE"

While a student at West Point, U S Grant excelled in mathematics and horsemanship. He jumped his horse over a bar five feet, six inches high, which made a record for the Academy, and a close second to the highest jump ever recorded in America. He received little honor for some of his efforts, however notably in the case recalled by Nicholas Smith in "Grant, the Man of Mystery." But perhaps the humor of it reconciled him.

The riding master was one Hershberger, "an amusing sort of a tyrant," and on one occasion, whether seriously, or as a joke, he determined to "take down" the young cadet.

At the exercise Grant was mounted on a powerful but vicious brute, that the cadets fought shy of, and was put at leaping the bar.

The bar was placed higher and higher as he came round the ring till it passed the record. The stubborn rider would not say "Enough," but the horse was disposed to shy and refuse to make the leap.

Grant gritted his teeth and spurred at it, but just as the horse gathered for the spring his swelling body burst the girth, and the rider and saddle tumbled into the ring.

Half stunned, Grant gathered himself up from the dust only to hear the "strident, cynical voice" of Hershberger calling out; "Cadet Grant, six demerits for dismounting without leave."

REPORTER TOOK AN AIR SHIP.

There are plenty of reporters at the aviation meets, but as their observations are usually made from terra firma, we have so far had very few accounts of how it really feels to fly. The man who runs the machine has other things to think about, and is not usually a graphic writer. A correspondent of the London Times, however, recently took an air trip, being invited to go because he weighed 196 pounds. The aviators were having a weight contest. The wind was blowing about 20 miles an hour, and the rest of the competitors declined to take the risk, so the aviator and the reporter had a "walk over," but not as tame as most victories of that kind. We read:

"The worst part of such a journey for the novice is the waiting until everything is ready for the start. The sensation of anticipation is not unlike the feeling that one has when one is waiting for a wounded boar to break cover from the corner into which he is driven. But once the propeller starts to whirl behind you all other thoughts beyond exhilaration of rapid motion vanish. You have gripped the struts thinking that you will have to hold on like grim death, but you immediately find that this is not necessary. The machine moves along the ground at an extraordinary pace, and I only knew that it was actually flying when I saw the elevating plane change from the horizontal. Of the motion of flight it is difficult to speak clearly. Even in the high wind that Mr Grace was now climbing, it was not more than the sensation of a beautifully balanced motor car. The earth—in this case the sward of the Lamark race course—seemed to be racing away from under us, and in a flash we were level with the first pylon and the judge's box.

"The machine was now up to 150 feet, and I became engrossed in Mr Grace's method in flying. It seemed to me that his attention was glued to his elevating plane, with just momentary glances out of his eye to judge the distance by which he had to shun each pylon in its turn. We were now crossing fields and water. I could observe the gates, the wire fences, and a man bathing in the water. Then we were round into the wind. Our pace immediately slackened, and Mr Grace was working to keep his machine in the air. As we crossed a road we were going so slowly that I could observe the direction of the hoof marks of a horse that had recently passed. Here all observation ceased, as Mr Grace was now battling with the wind. We had only 500 yards to traverse to cross the winning line, but the dead weight against the wind was bringing the machine down. Then there came a gust heavier than them all. It took the machine just up the requisite amount to cross the line, and we came gently to earth. It had only been a four minutes' ride, but it was certainly the most delightful ride that I had ever experienced. The only recollection that I have that will describe the general sensation is that of exquisite motion

Lord Rothschild
'It can safely be asserted,' writes an English correspondent of the 'American Hebrew,' that few personalities have left their impressions upon their Jewish communal life as has Nathan Mayer, first Baron Rothschild. See the great financier making a round of the East side synagogues on every Kippur afternoon, and mark the hundreds of co religionists who proudly walk in his train.

True, it were far more in keeping with the solemnity of the day had they remained within the confines of their own chevras. But apparently the opportunity of walking in the steps of live Jewish peer and a millionaire many times over to boot is irresistible.

They offer him a mitzvah at the free services. See the great congregation rise as one man, while this quiet greybeard mounts the improvised almanar, and listen while he reads the Haphtorah faultlessly!

I have often watched this most unassuming of men making his way to St Swithin's lane from his palace in Piccadilly at 10 o'clock in the morning. His modest coach threads its way through the maze of vehicles around the grey old Mansion House, and you may observe how this endless stream of traffic is at once brought to a standstill so that Lord Rothschild's equipage may pass along unimpeded.

At Tring, in Hertfordshire, Lord Rothschild is master of a wonderfully beautiful domain of 400 acres. Here he is indeed looked upon as a king. The railway porters at Tring are ready to accord him the privileges of a ruler. But the quiet man with the black bag slips into the train without a fuss.

'His wonderful house in fashionable Piccadilly, the facade of which every American visitor makes a point of inspecting, costs a fortune. It stands on the most expensive ground in London. Its beauties include a wonderful marble hall, with a double staircase that is the envy of half the famous hostesses of this great metropolis. His lordship's flunkeys, men of gigantic stature and perfect proportions, have no parallel in the homes of the elect. They are described as 'sons of Anak.'

Strangers wandering across Tring Park are continually reminded that nearby is the unrivalled zoological collection of the Hon Walter Rothschild, his lordship's son and heir, and one of the most noted naturalists of modern times. Here are kangaroos, cassowaries, rheas, ostriches zebras, of which the Hon Walter has driven a team more than once—and even stranger animals from other climes that are not to be met with outside the gates of the completest zoo.

Although it has been rashly stated that quite half of the animals exhibited at our fine Zoological Gardens are the Hon Walter's property, it is the fact that this ardent collector is in the habit of sending much of his surplus live stock to Regent's Park. Many are the stories that cluster around Lord Rothschild's heir—tales that have to be swallowed with the proverbial grain of salt. It is true, however, that at Tring Park is the Mecca of the naturalists of the world.

'Happy is he who has the honor to be invited to luncheon at New Court. The choicest viands are placed before him, and the Rothschild courtesy is manifested in a score of ways. Invariably the visitor is asked to take a cigar, an invitation that means a box of fifty or a hundred of a choice brand. His Lordship is held in especial reverence by the omnibus drivers and conductors of the metropolis, to whom he presents a brace of plump pheasants every yuletide.'

ATTRACTIVE TITLE.

The difficulty of using a foreign language was amusingly illustrated when a certain mission started work in China. They were in some perplexity, says Rev Lord Gascoyne Cecil in "Changing China," as to the title they should give to their society. They wanted to convey to the Chinese that their denomination claimed especially to feed the souls of men.

They explained all this to an educated Chinaman, and quoted some well known texts. He immediately wrote down the characters, and assured them that they represented what they had said about the spiritual food that they provided and would also be very popular with the Chinese, as indeed it proved.

The moment they opened the door of the Chapel they were besieged by hundreds of Chinese of the poorer class, who after listening for a short time, went away discontentedly.

The missionaries found out afterward that the title given to them literally translated was, Health Giving Free Restaurant.

A most attractive title to the hungry Chinese!—The Youth's Companion.

THE WELSH RIOTS.

(The 'Spectator,' London. Abridged.)
The riots in the coal trade of South Wales are the most acute symptom which has yet appeared in Great Britain of the general unrest affecting labor all over Europe. The worst sign about it is that it threatens the very existence of Trade Unionism owing to the widespread habit into which the men have fallen of throwing over their leaders and disregarding their pledged word. Trade Unionism has done immense service to the country by bringing employers and employees together in a manageable and humanizing relation; but the maintenance of that relation depends upon the willingness of the men to abide by the agreements entered into on their behalf by officials whom they themselves have appointed. The younger members of Trade Unions are intolerant of what they consider the small results achieved by their leaders; they speak of their leaders with impatience and disrespect, and in practice prove their contempt for them by ostentatiously setting aside their instructions or advice. In the South Wales coalfields the rioters have got more hopelessly beyond the control of their officials than in any other case. The officials have done their best, so far as we can learn, to recall the men to reason, to prevent them from destroying the source of their employment, and from senselessly pillaging and sacking the property of their own friends and neighbors. But they might as well have tried to ride the whirlwind.

ACCORDING TO MAMMY

(St Louis Times.)

"Dear mammy," wrote a bride transplanted from a southern family to the north, "please have Mammy Johanna send me her recipe for hot cakes."

Mammy Johanna had presided in the kitchen for thirty years. With much labor she wrote the recipe.

This was it: "Take as much flour as you need 'coddin' to how many folks they is to eat; put in some salt—Miss Mary knows how much; put in all the rest of the ingredients and be sure to have your griddle hot."
