

Why Insurance?

Have you ever considered "Painting" from the standpoint of an insurance policy?

The premium represented by the cost of painting is in proportion to the importance of the security afforded, no higher than other insurance; in fact it is considerably smaller, and soon becomes a minus quantity. Why Fire Insurance—Tornado Insurance—Lightning-rods? They only protect when that which you wish to avert, happens.

Martin-Senour Paint 100% Pure affords the utmost protection, insures your property, beginning with its application. It wards off the sun dogs of Old Sol, the nips of Old Jack Frost—the ravages of Old Father Time.

Prevents dry rot—checks deterioration. No safer, surer or more reliable insurance could be offered.

If your dealer cannot supply you, notify us and we will gladly direct you to where our paints are to be had.

PASSING EVENTS

It has practically been arranged that the coronation of King George will take place about the middle of May, 1911. Immediately after this ceremony the Duke of Connaught will come to Canada to assume the office of Governor General.

Count Zeppelin on Wednesday inaugurated the first regular airship passenger service in the world. His great dirigible the "Deutschland," carrying a dozen passengers, made the first scheduled trip from Friedrichshafen to Dusseldorf, Germany, a distance of three hundred miles in nine hours.

It having been reported that Gorky and Andrieff, exiled Russian writers, have bought Curtiss aeroplanes and are learning to fly, their ambition being to wing their way back to Russia and drop explosives upon the palace of the Czar, his Majesty commanded the Premier to collaborate with the Minister of Justice in framing a law governing aviation and the owners of aircraft of all kinds within the Russian Empire.

American delegates returning from the World's Missionary congress in Edinburgh assert that the most notable result of that assembly was the trend toward unity of the churches. This was shown in the atmosphere of devotion pervading the religious services, and especially in the debate following the report of the commission on co-operation and unity, and in the enthusiasm attending the formation of the international continuation committee, which will represent all the religious bodies in sympathy with the congress. The delegates were impressed with the conviction, often expressed from the platform, that a great reward for the missionary zeal of the Western churches would be the healing of divisions at home through the establishment of a modus vivendi abroad.

There were two violent earthquake shocks at Algiers on Friday afternoon. The walls of houses cracked and some collapsed at Aumale, a walled town of Algeria. Nobody was injured.

The United States Congress adjourned on Saturday. Among the important legislation carried during the session was the Railroad rate bill giving federal control of railway rates, and in addition thereto compelling railroads to secure the approval of the interstate Commerce Commission before advancing rates, authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to institute proceedings without waiting for the complaint of a shipper the creation of a special committee to investigate the extent to which railroad stocks are watered; the creation of a system of postal savings banks, thus gaining for small depositors the security of the United States Treasury and guaranteeing 2 per cent interest on their deposits, and the granting of a separate statehood to Arizona and New Mexico.—World Wide.

One of the odd Places of the Red Sea,
The first town of importance, sailing eastward from Constantinople, along the southern coast of the Black Sea, is the ancient City of Samsoun, founded by the Greeks more than 3,000 years ago and always of consequence commercially. It has, says William E. Curtis, writing in the Chicago Record-Herald, a splendid location, sloping gradually upward from the sea, but, like many people as well as towns, does not fulfill the expectations excited by its appearance from a distance. There is a big hospital for soldiers upon a slight eminence back of the town; there are several minaret; the five domes of a Greek church glisten in the sun; several imposing business blocks and residences line up well along the seashore and give a brave appearance to the place, but when you land you are disappointed to find the streets dirty and narrow with a mixture of smells arising from unknown sources, wretched pavements, and mangy dogs lying around in the sun scratching themselves in a way that is more suggestive than comfortable. Scratching is sometimes contagious.

But the narrow streets are interesting and the market place, with a circular fountain and an ancient mosque, offers one of the quaintest and most picturesque oriental scenes you could imagine. In the foreground a butter dealer in an indescribable costume of more colors than Joseph could possibly have had in his coat was lading greasy looking stuff from a great tub with a wooden spoon and on his scales, he used stones for weights. The vegetables and oranges are fine. Onions and garlic could be felt in the air both in the raw material and in the finished form of odors, Turks are largely vegetarians. Vegetables, fruits and soups made of grain are the chief articles of their diet. We are told that Samsoun is a great place for apples, so much so that the bears come down in droves from the mountains back of the town when the fruit is ripe and rob the orchards.

There is a cafe every few yards on every street, where it seemed as if the entire male population were sipping coffee, and smoking cigarettes. We saw a few nargiles—those long tubed water pipes which are associated with cross legged Turks—in Constantinople, but haven't found one anywhere else.

They ship large quantities of licorice root from Samsoun. It grows wild in the mountains. Those who know say that the quality, as well as the value, might be considerably improved by cultivation, but such a thing has never been attempted on a large scale. The sheep upon the mountain side furnish cargoes of wool for the ships, and the cattle that we see grazing in large herds add many hides; but tobacco is the chief article of export from Samsoun.

Royal Accounts

No advertisement is more valuable to a British tradesman than the royal warrant which allows him to place the same over his place of business and describe himself as "purveyor by appointment to his Majesty the King."

Each tradesman who has the royal custom must send in his bill at the end of the month. It is compared with his ledger account kept at Marlborough House, and if correct is paid in the first week of the month. No discount is asked of any of the royal accounts a tradesman who receives the royal custom is informed that he must supply goods at the lowest reasonable prices and there is never any attempt at bargaining by the official of the royal household. If a tradesman is thought to be making extortionate charges he simply loses the royal custom.

Coal is supplied to Marlborough House by contract the contracts being made for three years, and the contractors paid in equal half-yearly payments. Window cleaning capet cleaning and chimney sweeping are all done by contract, and the glass frames of large pictures are also kept clean by contract.

Servants wages are paid monthly the upper servants being paid by check sent to each from the treasurers' department. The King's accounts for clothes, cigars, theatres, newspapers, books and other personal articles are sent to his secretary, not the treasurer, and are also paid monthly. King George always likes to see these accounts before they are paid, and it was once a rule that they should be initiated by him before they were discharged.

Indian Legend About Crows.

The crows were once beautiful birds, loved and admired by all the fowls of the air. The crows of that time dressed in the most gorgeous colors and their heads were decorated with red feathers that glistened like fire when the sun reflected upon it. The crows had many servants who attended upon them. The wood pecker was the head servant and his helpers were the sap-suckers, yellow hammers and the linnetts. They faithfully performed their duty of combing the beautiful heads of the crows and would now and then pluck a feather from the crows head and stick it in their own, at the same time making the excuse that they were pulling at a snarled feather or plucking nits from his head.

So one day the crows got very angry at losing their beautiful feathers from their heads, and when the servants heard of this they immediately formed a plot against the crows.

So one morning as the servants were attending upon the crows they overpowered them and plucked all of their red feathers from their heads, and rolled them in a heap of charcoal, thus coloring them black to this very day. Any one can see for himself the crows are not on friendly terms with their former servants, for these still possess the red heads that the crows once had.—Toronto Weekly Sun.

If scars remaining from pimples be bathed in a saturated solution of borie acid and then anointed with zinc ointment they will readily disappear.

In preparing rhubarb do not peel it, simply cut in small squares and wash clear. This gives it that rich, red color, which cannot be secured if peeled.

Make a point never to wear a pair of new gloves until the buttons are resewn. This avoids dropping them at critical moments when one's reputation for neatness may suffer.

Water Plants When Away

House plants can be kept well-watered during a week's absence of the housekeeper, according to an ingenious Scotch device. Set a bowl of water well above the level of the plant to be watered by means of a box or a pile of books. Twist several strands of common darning wool together or braid them to form a long wick, and soak them in water. If one end of the wick reach to the bottom of the bowl, and the other hang over the plants, a steady drip will continue until the bowl is emptied.

The latest invention claimed is a wireless telephone for communication between miners underground and men on the surface. It is claimed that this will allow entombed miners to carry on conversation with their resources on the surface or in the workings.—Toronto Globe.
