Galveston's Great Causeway
Opened

Galveston's $2,000,000 causeway, the third of the three great works of protective engineering planned to fortify that city against a repetition of the disaster which destroyed it in 1900, was recently opened to traffic. Governor Colquitt, of Texas, at the wheel of an automobile, headed a procession of more than 1,000 cars, driving his machine through a barrier of ribbons and oleander blossoms.

The causeway stretches across Galveston Bay for 12,642 feet. Midway between mainland and island, the passage of ocean liners is permitted by a lift bridge operated by electric motors, which leaves a clear span of 100 ft when raised. The causeway proper, which is the filled and protected roadway approaching the arch-bridge portion from both the island and mainland ends, is 4,640 feet long on the mainland side and 5,530 feet on the island side. The arch-bridge portion is 2,472 feet in length and 66 feet in width, while the causeway proper is 110 feet wide. The August Popular Mechanics Magazine contains a number of views of the causeway.

Farmers Are Hopeful For Harvest
In West

(Canadian Press Despatches.)

WINNIPEG, Aug. 30.—Rain fell in many parts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan last night. In Winnipeg district heavy rain fell all night. It is generally bright and warm today in the west.

REGINA, SASK., Aug. 30.—It is clear and cold here to-day, but the sun is shining and farmers are hopeful for the harvest. If the sunshine of to-day continues, cutting will be general again by Monday. Frost was feared last night, but the mercury did not go lower than 35 and the district escaped. A biting wind makes it unpleasant out of doors in spite of the sun, but it is doing much toward drying out the land.

A Plea For Evasion

From Washington there has been published broadcast through the Associated Press a document that has all the appearance of a quasi official rider to President Taft's message containing his reasons for not vetoing the Panama Canal bill. "From the American viewpoint," it says, "There are many loopholes to escape from the British contention"; That the question whether the exemption from tolls does or does not contravene the Hay-Pauncefot Treaty shall be submitted to The Hague Tribunal. In fact the document announces to the world that the matter will never be arbitrated at The Hague, and proceeds to give reasons why it will be relied on to justify the Senate in refusing to send it there.

The first "loophole" in the series of three in the document is that as the exemption from tolls is only for vessels engaged in United States coastwise traffic and as foreign vessels are not permitted to engage in that traffic, the exemption cannot be held to place any disability on them. The obvious answer is that if this is the whole case, then the best way to settle it is a reference to The Hague Tribunal. But it is not the whole case, as the coming diplomatic correspondence will no doubt make clear.

The second "loophole" is that the Hay-Pauncefot Treaty is no longer applicable to the canal strip, which was acquired by the United States subsequent to its negotiation and conclusion. More than an answer in this contention suggest themselves, but one will here suffice. It was pointed out by Senator Root during the debate on the Panama Canal bill that United States sovereignty over the strip is made explicitly subject to the Hay-Pauncefot Treaty which authorized the construction of the canal.

The third "loophole" by which to escape arbitration is that "nowhere would it be possible to secure unbiased arbitrators, because every maritime country finds its interests in opposition to the American contention for a right of discrimination in the use of the canal." This amounts to an assertion that foreign jurists are not to be trusted to decide what the treaty means on an important point because their respective countries are commercially interested in the matter. If no sounder arguments than these can be found the United States will occupy an unenviable position in the eyes of the world when its Senate blocks the way to the arbitration of a question that lends itself with peculiar appropriateness to that mode of settlement.—Toronto Globe.

To restore the shape of feathers which have become straight from having been in rain or damp, hold them in front of, but not too near, a clear fire for a few minutes. Then bend them to the position in which they originally were. While held in this position quickly paint the back of the stem with liquid glue, and let it dry while the feather is still bent.

Marlboro Tarts.—Mix thoroughly two cups of grated tart apple, one and one-half cups of sugar, two well-beaten eggs, two tablespoons of melted butter, the grated rind and juice of one lemon, and one cup of thin cream. Line patty tins with rich pastry, fill with the mixture, put narrow, notched strips (cut with a jagged from the paste) across the top, and bake quickly.
