ELECTRIC WATER LIFT.

Automatically Controlled Pump Maintains Tank Pressure.

One of the inconveniences of country and suburban life is the lack of flowing water in the house. Electricity, however, has come to the rescue, making possible city and town conveniences in the matter of water on each floor and a bathroom and kitchen supply.

By attaching the Dayton sanitary water lift to the water piping of the house and connecting to a well, spring, lake or other source of supply water under pressure may be had at small cost. In fact, at 10 cents per kilowatt hour the average cost of pumping 1,000 gallons of water is 9 cents. The outfit consists of a small electric motor, pump, water tank and an automatic switch, which is operated by pressure. When the pressure in the tank falls to twenty pounds the switch closes the circuit and starts the motor, which continues to run until the pressure reaches thirty-five pounds, when the switch opens the circuit.

Equipped with either an alternating or a direct current motor, a tank of suitable size to meet requirements and compactly set on an iron frame, the outfit is readily installed and self regulating.—Popular Electricity.

Brightness of the Sun.

Camille Flammarion undertakes to answer in L'Astronomie the following question, proposed to him by a correspondent: Why are our eyes less dazzled by the sun toward sunset than just after sunrise? Is the early morning sun really brighter than the late afternoon sun?

There are two answers, one physiological, the other physical. The retina becomes progressively more sensitive in the dark. A sudden illumination at night dazzles our eyes, whereas the same absolute intensity of light would have much less effect in the daytime. During the day the eye becomes gradually more and more accustomed to the light—in other words, less sensitive to it.

However, the setting sun is probably actually less bright than the rising sun because of the diminished purity of the atmosphere through which it shines. Solar radiation pumps up an enormous amount of moisture from the earth during the day.

Punsters.

Douglas Jerrold, when challenged to make a pun on the zodiac, replied, "Gemini, I Can-er."

Theodore Hook, when he was impressing at a party, and a Mr. Winter, a well known inspector of taxes, was announced, went on without a moment's break in his performance:

Here comes Mr. Winter, inspector of taxes.

I'd advise ye to give him whatever he axes.

I'd advise ye to give him without any hummer.

For though his name's Winter his actions are summery.

Greeting

Sincerely appreciating your generous patronage, we wish to extend to all our customers our best wishes, and trust the New Year will prove the Happiest and Best you have experienced.
