Sermon From Shakespeare

Copr. 1909 by Bradley-Garretson, Co. Ltd. All the world's a stage, And all the men and women merely players.

—As You Like It, Act II., Sc. 7. Shakespeare in his use of figures of speech draws on ancient mythology, on the history of Greece and Rome, and on the legends and lore of Asia and medieval Europe. His pages are crowded with metaphors culled from nature, his dramas abound in figures referring to sports,—to the hunt, to falconry, to bowling, and to tennis. There is nothing that he more frequently uses to illustrate an idea or situation than his own profession. To Antonio the successful merchant the world was.

"A stage, where every man must play his part."

To Macbeth, the tyrant who was beginning to feel the unrelenting hand of Nemesis, life was

"A poor player, That struts and frets his hour upon the stage, And then is heard no more."

Coriolanus, who under the influences of love was weakening in his resolve to hold vengeance dearer than country, mother, wife, or child, compared himself to a dull actor who had forgot his part.

The figure of the world as a stage and its inhabitants as actors in the drama of existence is a powerful one. From childhood to old age, forcibly or weakly all play their parts. When the curtain drops whether there be applause or hisses depends on how a man has acquitted himself. The world is a vast stage, kings and peasants, poets and historians, artists and artisans, manufacturers and apprentices, sailors and farmers, have all their parts. The background is the vast heavens, the stage is ocean, plain and hill.

The profession of an actor is an exacting one. To be a finished actor, to play the part allotted well requires years of experience and study. On the stage youthful associations count for much, but close study counts for more. A lad brought up in the company of actors has a better chance of succeeding than one who has entered the profession late in life. For success the exits and entrances must be known, the cues must be familiar, the characters must be studied and practised until a man forgets himself and does not merely play, but is a Hamlet, a Lear, or a Macbeth.

So is it with life. How a man plays his part depends much upon his early environment but more upon study. The merchant who studies his markets and the tastes of his customers is the one who will succeed in business. The poet who studies diligently and with reverence Homer and Virgil, Goethe and Schiller, Shakespeare and Milton, is the one most likely to produce song that will attract and stimulate. The architect who is familiar with the works of such immortal geniuses as Michel Angelo and Sir Christopher Wren stands a good chance of giving beauty and strength to his creations. The politician who has made himself acquainted with history, ancient and modern, with the laws and customs of his own and other countries, with the lives and works of great statesmen who have changed the complexion of society, will probably make his influence felt on his nation and time.

The actor, too, in order to play his part well must practise it constantly. Irving's Shylock, Booth's Hamlet, Salvini's Othello, Forrest's Lear, Mrs. Siddon's Ophelia, Helen Terry's Portia were not the products of the study of a few months. A lifetime of application and continuous practise is necessary for perfection in the actor's art. On the stage of the world the actors have to practise their parts. In every walk of life there are dull actors who never really knew their parts. Failure in business and professional life can generally be traced to ignorance or neglect. The actor who misconceives the character he is representing or forgets his lines is greeted with hoots and hisses. In life the player who fails in his part gets the laughter and sneers of the crowd. The world has but little sympathy for failures. Success is the measure of a man's greatness, and success can be achieved only by watchfulness, study, and practise.

Another point of similarity between the stage and life is that actors or men do not stand alone. There is a whole world of feeling represented in the drama "As You Like It" from which the words "all the world's a stage" are taken. There are bitter enemies and loving friends, inhabitants of the court and dwellers in the wild wood. Love and hate, charity and greed, pity and cruelty are all represented in it. A number of actors are required to adequately bring out the situations. No actor stands alone on the stage of the world. In the great drama of life there are many players. The drama to be successful must be played according to the rules, and the actors who attain prominence are those who adhere to the laws of the world, their stage, and the laws of life, their drama. Success comes to the men who have selected parts suited to their character, and have wisely and diligently played their parts,—played them with an eye to the actions of the other characters in the drama.

Coffee Prices High

But Outlook is They Will go Higher

Although coffee now commands the highest prices in years, a further advance is imminent, according to local roasters, who declare that matters have come to such a pass that they are not getting back a new dollar for an old one at the present selling prices. It is claimed that green coffee costs 10c a pound more than it did three years ago, while in that period the cost to the retailer has been increased only 5c. The roasters have been slow to raise the price to the distributors, because they had reason to suppose that the sharp advance in wholesale prices would be only temporary, and they feared a serious curtailment of consumption if the prices to the consumer went up too rapidly.

"The advance in wholesale prices, however, has proved far more permanent than expected and there is so little in sight to suggest any relief that the rosters have only one of two courses to pursue, either to go out of business, as, indeed, several have in the past year, or get prices for their goods that will net them some profit. If the retailer is obliged to pay more for coffee, it is only natural that higher prices will be demanded from the consumer. Coffee, which used to retail for 35c a pound, should now bring 45c, and goods that a few years ago sold at 22c, should bring 30 to 32c to cover the wholesale prices.

"It should not be understood that coffee is at all scarce; indeed, there is plenty of coffee in the world, but almost two-thirds of the total supply is held under the valorization scheme and interests friendly to those behind that plan, which has for its principal end the maintenance of coffee at a high price.

The present world's supply of coffee is about 12,000,000 bags; of that total about 500,000 bags are held by the valorization interests, while in Brazil there are about 2,500,000 bags more, which are practically kept out of the channels of trade because the owners ask more money than the coffee is actually worth. Thus something like 7,000,000 bags of coffee are kept off the market and there is only a floating supply of approximately 5,000,000 bags.

Garden Freshness of "SALADA"

Fresh and fragrant from the gardens of the finest tea-producing country in the world. Ask your grocer for a package to-day—you'll like it.

The owners of the large available supply are in a position to do what they will with the market, and as present indications are that the next Brazil crop will be a small one, they are inclined to take every advantage of their position. The Brazilian planter is waxing wealthy on the present high prices of coffee and interests on the bonds floated under the valorization scheme is easily met while the Brazilian Government gets its share in what the local roasters are pleased to call a 'holdup' by a surtax, or an export duty on all coffee exported in excess of 10,000,000 bags in one year. In fact the roasters and consumers of the country seem to be the only ones in the industry who do not benefit by the present high prices.

Women All Saved Says Private Wire

April 17th—A message forwarded by the 'Francona' to New York gives the total drowned as 2000, and the number on the 'Carpathia' as 710.

A relayed private message from the 'Carpathia' received to-day announced that 'All women are safe.' The message was received by Mrs. J. W. Bonnell, of Youngstown, at the Waldorf, New York, from Henry Wick, her brother, who is aboard the 'Olympic'

Cunard Line officials say that the reason details of disaster are not forthcoming from the 'Carpathia' is due to the weak wireless aboard that boat.

The 'Carpathia' with the rescued passengers from the 'Titanic' aboard, was reported 569 miles east of Ambrose Channel, at the entrance to New York harbor, at 11 o'clock last night, and is expected to reach New York at 9 o'clock to-morrow night.

There is still no definite word of Mr. C. M. Hays or the other missing Montrealers, though it is now certain that they are not posted amongst the saved in New York. In spite of that a private message from New York this morning gives a ray of hope.

Cargo of Coffins

Sad Scene in Halifax As They Were Hauled to the Wharf

Halifax, N. S. April 17.—Not since April 1st, 1873 thirty-nine years ago when White Star liner 'Atlantic' crashed into the ledges of Torrance bay and over 500 souls went down to watery graves, have such scenes been witnessed in Halifax this morning when wagon loads of rough wooden coffins were hauled through the streets to the cable ship 'Mackay Bennett' at the cable ship wharf.

The 'Mackay Bennett' has been chartered by the White Star line to proceed at once from Halifax to the scene of the 'Titanic' disaster, and the coffins were sent to the ship by John Snow and Sons, funeral directors, who are sending a representative out on the ship to prepare any bodies for burial that may be recovered.

How long the 'Mackay Bennett' will be out is not known, but it is expected that she will be away at least a week. She is fitted up with the most modern apparatus for recovering bodies. If many bodies are found floating upon the sea it is likely that other steamers will be ordered out to the scene. Among those who went out on the 'Mackay Bennett' was Canon Hind, of All Saints Cathedral, and a number of New York, Boston and upper Canadian newspaper men.

Shock of Titanic Disaster Killed Manitoba Man

Boissevain, Man., April 16—J. P. Alexander, ex-M. P. P., and deputy registrar of the Boissevain land titles office, dropped dead this morning at 9.30 o'clock. Death took place shortly after he got into a barber's chair. Heart failure was the cause. The news of the loss of the Titanic yesterday upset him and the later news of the heavy loss of life caused his death.

Complicated Census Work.

Census taking in China, it would appear, is a business complicated by Chinese customs. Thus the Chinese method of reckoning age is not the same as the European. A Chinese child at birth is said to be one year old, and after it has passed one New Year it is said to be two years old; so that if born in the last month of the year it may be said to be two years of age before it is 30 days old according to European reckoning. Difficulties are encountered in China, as elsewhere, in regard to the ages of females. There was an old lady of Ching-tzu known to be over 100, who insisted on the enumerator entering her age at 99. This was because it is a customary term of abuse to call a person a "hundred years old donkey," or "ten-toothed donkey," which has the same significance. It is stated to be a common thing for a Chinese mother to give a son the name of a girl, presumably to deceive the fates, it being a common and true saying that a girl is easier to rear. This of course is another source of trouble to the enumerators.
