South Africa Has A Color Question

Capetown, South Africa, May 9—The color question was brought prominently to the front by the promise of the premier, General Louis Botha, in parliament this afternoon to appoint a commission to inquire into the "Black Peril" problem. The question has been increasingly attracting attention in South Africa in consequence of the frequent assaults made upon white women.

"Cancer has at last, by a steady and uniform increase year after year, reached a mortality of 8,000," a recent bulletin of the New York State Department of Health reports.

Sermon From Shakespeare

(Copr. 1909 by Bradley-Garretson Co. Ltd.) Be great in act, as you have been in thought.

—King John, Act V., Sc. I. The world is full of men who have "nothing done but great things undone." Imagination creates great poems, makes eloquent speeches, paints magnificent pictures, invents splendid instruments. Potential poets, orators, artists and inventors abound. Here and there a Shakespeare, or a Milton, a Raphael or a Titian, a Burke or a Webster, a Watt or an Edison raises his head out of a crowd of dreamers and takes his place among the illustrious men of action.

Not infrequently some youth is described as a promising lad, a young genius. He is remarkably precocious in thought, far in advance of his years. When he reaches maturity his friends are amazed to find that some comrade of whom nothing was expected has passed him in the race for distinction. He may have had breadth of mind, predominating imagination; the other may have had narrowness of soul, but he was developed on the side of will, which so far as this practical world is concerned is infinitely better than imagination. The greatest men are those in whom penetrating imagination and strength of will are equally combined.

Shakespeare is supreme in literature. There is the clearest evidence that his dramas are not the product of mere imaginative genius. They are more largely the product of his genius for work. His series of eight historical dramas is, in many ways, his greatness achievement. Wherein lies this greatest? In the profound grasp of social and political questions, in an intimate knowledge of the facts and characters of each historical period. He conceived a great series of dramas, his imagination bodied them forth, and he at once went to work to prepare himself to give them tangible form. The very firstlings of his heart were the firstlings of his country; he reconstructed the characters of by-gone ages; he made use of any historical studies he found at hand. Shakespeare's plays are all evidences that he was great in act as he was in thought. Milton for many years had been dreaming of producing a great epic. Opportunity was lacking, but, when the fitting moment arrived, he acted, and produced an immortal poem. Epics and dramas have been and are being dreamt out daily: the man of action is required to give them form.

Thousands have gazed upon noble statues, sublime paintings and listened to inspiring music and have been impelled to create, in their imaginations, statues, paintings and music. But they fail to put their thoughts into action. Doubtless some of these dreamers are the imaginative equals of the great poets, painters and musicians under whose influence they have come, but they lack the patient industry, the power for taking infinite pains, the determination not to be overcome. In every great artist's career there have been times when he has felt that he could never approximate his ideal. If he were less than the greatest he allowed the difficulties to conquer him, if he were of the stuff that heroes and masters are made of, he braced himself and with renewed energy faced his difficulties and usually won.

Every great invention is an evidence that some man was as great in act as he was in thought. From the beginning of the nineteenth century occasional dreamers conceived that sound might be carried to a distance over a wire and reproduced. Alexander Graham Bell, a Scotch lad, had his imagination stirred by this thought. To think with him was to act. Laboriously he toiled to give material shape to his dream. It took years of experimenting, study and privation, but continuous action combined with buoyant imagination and faith in himself brought success. A thousand examples might be given from the modern world to prove that it is only by being as great in act as in thought that anything worth while is achieved. The failures are for the most part those who dreamt, but did not act. King Richard II. was a dreamer with a lofty conception of kingship, but he never got farther than the conception. Henry V. had an equally lofty ideal, but with him thought and action went hand in hand.

The greatness of the Elizabethan age lies in the fact that it was a time of action. England conceived it possible to take first place among the nations, her seamen promptly sailed forth to explore the ends of the earth. Often some individual is pointed out as a pronounced failure: he had great promise, but he lacked the energy to act. Many a tramp on the wayside has had the dreams of a Shakespeare or Wordsworth. It is often the case that men who can rise to the most sublime heights may, under other circumstances, sink to the lowest depths. It is action that saves. When the wheels of industry are whirling and the rattle of the reaper is heard in the fields, there is happiness in the nation, when the factories are silent and the fields uncultivated, there is sorrow. The greatness of nations and individuals can be measured by the action they display in working out their thought.

Beattie Nesbitt In Toronto Jail

Toronto, May 12—Dr. William Beattie Nesbitt, wanted on charges of fraud and forgery in connection with the wrecking of the Farmer's Bank, was brought back to Toronto this morning and is now lodged in the county jail.

The same secrecy which surrounded his departure from Chicago yesterday marked his arrival here. While a dozen newspaper men and press photographers waited on the depot platform of the Grand Trunk Railway at North Parkdale, Provincial Inspector A. C. Boyd conducted his prisoner off the opposite side of the train and down a stairway into the Queen Street subway, where a taxicab was waiting.

The arrangements for spiriting Dr. Nesbitt out of Chicago were made with the same care and caution. On Thursday the warrant of surrender was received from Washington at the attorney-general's department and Superintendent Rogers wired to Chicago to learn if habeas corpus proceedings had been entered upon in Dr. Nesbitt's behalf. The reply was in the negative.

Inspector Boyd started for Chicago the same night, with the warrant and a letter to the Chicago assistant chief of police. Presenting the letter, an officer was placed at his service and at 2 o'clock they appeared before the assistant United States marshal and produced the warrant of surrender. Dr. Nesbitt was brought from jail, the warrant read, and he was handed over to the officers, despite his protest that he should be allowed time to see his counsel who was preparing to apply for a writ of habeas corpus. The three took a taxicab, and in order to prevent the doctor's counsel interfering to prevent his departure, the taxicab was driven about the streets until 3 o'clock, reaching a side entrance of the Dearborn street station just in time to board the train, where a state room awaited them.

The detective and his prisoner were well outside the limits of the state of Illinois before Dr. Nesbitt's counsel was apprised of the trick which the Canadian officer had played on him. The porter of the car was charged to keep silent as to the identity of his passengers. Boyd and the doctor were driven first to Superintendent Rogers' residence in Parkdale and then accompanied by them was taken to jail, where Governor Chambers was enjoined to let the prisoner have no communication with W. R. Travers, the convicted bank manager, brought from Kingston penitentiary to give evidence during the extradition proceedings and the court hearings which will follow. Tomorrow Dr. Nesbitt will be formally handed over to the Toronto police and will be arraigned in the morning police court.

Thousands in Louisiana are in State of Terror

New Orleans, May 11—Dawn today brought relief and hope to thousands of people and ended a night of excitement and terror for these living in up state towns and villages behind levees considered none too safe, because of the terrific rain storm that swept down the Mississippi River from the northern portion Louisiana to the gulf. The deluge was accompanied by hail and lightning, and a hurricane that dashed river waters over levees in cascades from Baton Rouge south, tearing away temporary earthworks recently constructed. From scores of towns, belated telegrams tell of conditions almost bordering on panic, where hundreds of frightened people left farm dwellings and sought safety in brick and stone buildings.

Hundreds living in districts considered unsafe by the United States army officers, who had refused to heed warning and leave their homes changed their minds when the storm came and exodus began for the concentration camps. Many places reported as much as six inches of rain which fell within about four hours, ending at 10 o'clock flooding towns and villages, causing the inhabitants to believe that the worst had happened, that the levees had given away under the tremendous strain and the flood was on.

At dozens of points up and down the river, where levees were thought weakened hundreds of citizens, white and black, worked alongside gangs of convicts all night long in the driving rain, digging mud and piling sand bags on levee tops, to keep back the torrential waters, piling down from the north.

It was a fight for life, and property against heavy odds at many places from Torras almost to this city. At New Orleans the wind backed up the water until the gauge at 10 o'clock registered 21.9 feet one tenth less than the weather bureau official prediction. Water was blown over the levees here at many places. At the southern pacific transfer ferry the water literally poured over the lines of sand bags placed about the ferry house by the railroad people.

Emergency gangs stopped the overflow after half an hours work. The levee engineers last night unable to get into communication with any of the points up river on account of the broken wires.

The city streets were turned into torrents, the water in several instances flooding business houses to the depth of four inches, filling basements and man-holes.

In the resident district, the water was over the sidewalks by several inches. Joseph Delfe, a drug clerk, with a companion tried to jump the Carrollton ave drainage in which the water was level with the street he misjudged the distance and was drowned.

Hundreds were caught in the down pour down town, unable to get to their homes because of the crippled car service. Scores of well dressed men took off their water logged shoes slung them over their shoulders rolled up their trousers to their knees, and waded bare-legged to their homes.
