Problems of Light.

A remarkable increase in the efficient distribution of light from an incandescent or other lamp has been exhibited by the holophone reflectors recently introduced in England. Photometric tests have shown that the efficiency is increased from seven to ten times by the reflectors, and the distribution is very much improved. The reflectors are in the form of globes surrounding the light, having a series of prisms in the interior to diffuse the light and another series of horizontal prisms on the exterior to redirect the light. The angles and inclinations of the external prisms are carefully calculated in order to direct the light to the best advantage. The gain in effective illumination is described as surprising.

A Jirikisha With One Wheel.

According to Consul General James T. DuBois of Singapore, a one wheeled jirikisha, on the monocyclus principle, is being introduced among the Chinese of the Malay states. It is said to be safe and to have many advantages over the old fashioned vehicle. There is no jarring drag in rounding corners, the wear and tear is reduced to a minimum, the work on the pulleys greatly reduced and a 20 per cent increased speed obtained.

HERE IS GOOD ADVICE TO TAKE

It will help those who have Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

There are other "old enemies" similar to the one mentioned in this testimonial. Kidney and Bladder Troubles are always enemies to good health. As soon as you start to take GIN PILLS these ailments begin to disappear. It is the same in cases of Lumbago, Sciatica and like complaints. This letter illustrates the benefit of GIN PILLS.

Winnipeg, Jan. 6th.

"I have been a sufferer from Lumbago for some years past and during Christmas week had a very acute attack which confined me to the house. About the latter part of April, I met your Mr. Hill and mentioned my complaint to him. He advised me to take GIN PILLS. I have been taking them at intervals during the early part of the present winter, and up to date have had no return of my old trouble—in fact, I feel better than I have for years and think that my old enemy has vanished for good and all."

DESOLATION AND DESPAIR.

The Dreadful Horrors of the Turkish Cholera Camps.

The scenes of death and desolation and despair which are part and parcel of the kingdom of the god of battles seldom have been brought so vividly to the minds of peaceful people as in the terribly realistic pictures of the Turkish cholera camps and in the dispatches of hardened war correspondents, whose souls sickened at the horrors they witnessed. There were several cholera camps, but the most dreadful examples of irremediable suffering and wholesale deaths, under conditions that made death a welcome friend, were seen in the main camp at Hademkeni, a short distance behind the headquarters of Nazim Pasha, the Turkish commander-in-chief, on the Tebatolja lines.

"The horrid scenes in the villages in the rear of the army pale altogether into insignificance when compared with the horrors of Hademkeni," wrote a correspondent of The London Daily Telegraph, "where the remnants of the army defeated at Lule Barges were finally rallied. Three days ago I rode over the hills from the place where I was encamped, intending to visit Hademkeni. I mounted the last slope which hid the valley in which it lies, and then I was brought to a standstill by the awful babel of sounds which arose from beneath me. I was gazing into the valley of the shadow of death. There is a station at Hademkeni, and a train was in the station. It was black with the most wretched specimens of sick humanity seeking to escape from the dread spectre. The large square in the centre of Hademkeni resembled a successful fly-paper in midsummer. It was covered with the corpses of the dead and the writhing bodies of the living in all attitudes—some prone, some sitting, some kneeling, some constantly shifting, some with hands clasped as if in supplication. In some parts of the area the dead were piled in heaps; in others those still living were almost as closely packed. This shocking lake of misery was being constantly fed by rivulets of stretcher-bearers, bringing in fresh victims from the camps and forts, and by others who crawled in of their own accord, seeming to prefer to end their days in the company of their fellow men or else expecting to find succor."

Antiquity of Porto Rico.

Ethnologists have reason for thinking that Porto Rico and the adjoining islands may have been peopled from the valley of the Orinoco instead of from Yucatan. When first occupied by man Porto Rico may have been a part of a peninsula connected with South America. Its fauna and flora are of the South American type, and it contains relics of a forgotten race which show evidence of a high grade of culture. Few traces of these aborigines are now to be found except in the interior of the island. Among the curious remains are stone inclosed plazas on which ceremonial dances were performed. The remains of carved idols and pottery show no small degree of skill and taste. No traces of stone buildings resembling those of the Mayas are found, but the houses are of the South American type. The manner of disposing of the dead also resembled that practiced in the valley of the Orinoco.

Motion Pictures as Detectives.

Through a Paris contemporary we learn of a novel method adopted by the Prague police authorities to detect the perpetrators of high crimes and misdemeanors. But whether the project will prove a success remains to be seen. When a person of distinction in the annals of crime is being sought and the police experience difficulty in laying hands upon the suspect, in future they will send to every cinematograph exhibition in Bohemia a photograph of the person "wanted." During the entertainment the picture will be shown with some little explanatory note, and at the conclusion each member of the audience will be free to act as an amateur detective. It seems very likely that this method will be fruitful in actions for damages.—London Globe.

Care of the Eyes.

On rising in the morning the eyes should be bathed gently in cold water. Twenty passes are said to be decidedly strengthening. While using them closely they should be rested at intervals of an hour or two, for the strain of constant reading, etc., is like that of extending the arms at a certain height immovably. Imagine, then, the taxing of the eyes, which cannot complain save after years of irreparable neglect. When dust settles in the eyes warm water will soothe them of any inflammation.

Wool Drying.

Wool drying is one of the principal and serious operations in the woolen industry. The more gently and uniformly the wool is dried the better is the result attained, for should the wool be slightly damp in some of its parts the dye does not take well, and the result is an unevenly dyed yarn, which shows in the texture of the woven goods. Overdrying is also bad.

Gold And Silver Gospels.

"The Gold and Silver Gospels" is the name of a very peculiar book now preserved in the Upsala library in Sweden. It is printed with metal type on violet colored vellum, the letters being silver and the initials gold. When it was printed, by whom and what were the methods employed are questions which have great interest for the curious, but have never been answered.

NOTABLE SURRENDERS

SCENES WHICH STAND OUT IN THE ANNALS OF WAR.

The Meeting of the Victor and the Vanquished is a Dramatic Moment and Has Been Marked by Episodes Which Show the Calibre of the Great Warriors—Napoleon Surrendered in State.

In the story of war there is no chapter more thrilling than that which tells how, a generation ago, a comparative handful of Turks held the village of Plevna for five months against a quarter of a million of Russia's picked soldiery.

Again and again the Muscovites hurled themselves against Osman Digma's trenches and redoubts, to be swept back again and again, leaving thousands of slain behind them. And it was only when hunger and disease had this band of heroes in their grip that the gallant Turkish leader made his desperate and historic effort to break his way through the enemy's lines—a "forlorn hope" which ended, as it was bound to end, in failure.

But not until the Turks were surrounded by the Muscovites in overwhelming numbers and Osman himself was seriously wounded, did the white flag at last give the signal of surrender. When, later, the vanquished hero was led before the Russian Czar, carrying himself as proudly in defeat as in victory, Alexander, with a cordial hand-grip, gave him this generous greeting: "Sir, I congratulate you on your fine defence. It was one of the most splendid feats in the history of war."

It was with still a bold front that Mahmud met his conqueror, after his dervish army had been wiped out of existence on the banks of the Athara River. When, his hands tied behind his back, he was conducted into the presence of the Sirdar, it was, with his head carried high and a mien of defiance, "Are you, Mahmud?" asked the Sirdar. "Yes," was the answer; "and I am the same as you." "Why did you come to make war here?" "I came," answered Mahmud, proudly, "because like you, I was told to come."

For five months, in 1855, the Turks under General Williams, held the mountain fortress of Kars against a Russian army more than three times their number; and only when food and ammunition both were exhausted, and further defence became hopeless, did the brave English leader even think of surrender. Then it was that the Russian General, Mouraviev, wrote to him one of the most generous messages ever sent to a defeated enemy. "General Williams," he wrote, "you have made yourself a name in history; and posterity will stand amazed at the endurance, the courage, the discipline which this siege has called forth in the remains of an army. Let us arrange a capitulation which will satisfy the demands of war without dis-gracing humanity.

When General Cronje, after his brave fight on the bank of the Modder River, was compelled to surrender to Lord Roberts, with 4,000 of his army the bitterness, as he afterwards said, was taken out of his humiliation by the gracious words addressed to him by his victor, who, with a warm hand-clasp, said to him: "Commandant Cronje, you have indeed made a gallant defence, which will win the admiration of the world."

The first Napoleon, after the crowning disaster of Waterloo, finding escape from France impossible, surrendered to Captain Maitland, of the Belleophon, on July 15th, 1815. As he stepped on board, his breast ablaze with decorations, and escorted by an imposing retinue of officers and servants, it was almost with the air of a conqueror that he addressed the captain: "Sir, I come to place myself under the protection of your King and your laws."

Much more abject was the downfall of his successor, the third Napoleon, that September day in 1870, when he was compelled to resign both crown and sword. Surrounded in Sedan by an overwhelming host of the enemy, 50,000 of his men dead or taken prisoners, his army demoralized under a deluge of death from five hundred guns, he realized that the end had come. Then, with the white flag of defeat fluttering over his citadel, he wrote to the Prussian King this pathetic note: "Brother,—Not able to die at the head of my troops. I place my sword at your Majesty's feet.—Napoleon."

But France was not yet beaten. Marshall Bazaine still had a large army under his command; but he, too, was in a perilous plight, for he was shut up in Metz, by a German force as great as his own. When sortie after sortie was repulsed with heavy loss and he realized that escape was impossible, he tried to save his army by surrendering Metz. But to his overtures Bismark returned the haughty answer, "I occupy France with more than a million men, and I make no peace with a marshal. The surrender must be unconditional."

And on October 27th Bazaine capitulated, and three marshals, 600 officers, and 173,000 men laid down their arms and became prisoners of war. For Bazaine a worse fate was reserved; for he was later tried by court-martial and sentenced to degradation and death—a sentence which was commuted to one of twenty years' imprisonment.

Economical to the Last.

There was once a Scotsman who was down in the world without hope, with only threepence in his pocket. He decided on suicide and, entering a chemist's shop, asked for threepennyworth of arsenic. "What do you want it for?" demanded the chemist. "Twopence," said the Scotsman.

The Effect.

"Mathilde, throw that poor beggar a crown."
"Ah, yes, he looks very unhappy."
"Not on that account, but the Meyer's are watching us from their window opposite."
