AGED PEOPLE
cannot properly masticate solid foods and digestion is often upset—they do not receive the needed nourishment to make strength and preserve health, but if aged people everywhere could only realize the strength-sustaining nourishment in Scott's Emulsion they would take it after every meal.

It possesses the nourishing elements of cod liver oil, the vital powers of the hypophosphites of lime and soda and the curative qualities of glycerin, all perfectly combined that nature immediately appropriates them to create strength—nourish the organs and build the body. It relieves rheumatism and ailments due to declining years. It adds to the span of life.

BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ITS HISTORY

A Glance at the Coast Province Since Captain Vancouver's Visit in 1782

Captain Vancouver was really the first man to bring the present British Columbia before the world. In 1782 he sailed along the Pacific coast and made an extensive and important geographical survey. Then, in 1793, Alexander Mackenzie and a party of fur traders belonging to the North-west Company, which became such a bitter rival of the Hudson's Bay Company, reached the Pacific Ocean after a long journey overland through the mountains. For twenty-eight years the Northwest fur traders and the Hudson's Bay Company competed bitterly with each other, and then amalgamated, establishing a series of Hudson's Bay posts throughout the territory now owned by the Province. At that time the only product of "New Caledonia," as the mountainous section was then called, was furs. All the while the Hudson's Bay Company held New Caledonia under lease from the British Government, and in 1849, largely as a result of the efforts of the company, Vancouver Island was proclaimed a British colony, although the influx of white settlers had been very slow.

Found Gold

One day, in the year 1858, gold was discovered on the mainland, and proved to be the lodestone which first attracted close attention to British Columbia. Thousands of treasure-hunters and settlers rushed in from the southern portions of the Pacific coast, and very soon important changes were made in the national status of old New Caledonia. The territory was created a Crown colony, with responsible government, and called British Columbia. Laws were enacted and enforced in accordance with British precedent; roads and trails were made to the various "diggings"; civic, educational and religious institutions were established, and British Columbia changed in the eyes of the world from a vast hyperborean wilderness inhabited by wild beasts and savage men to a veritable army of sturdy pioneers from all parts of the world. Thus, British Columbia's present premier industry—that of mining—was started, and with it the first big step towards developing the natural resources of the Province. At this time the population of British Columbia numbered slightly over ten thousand. In 1866 the colony of Vancouver Island was united with British Columbia, and five years later the entire Province became a part of the Dominion of Canada.

Real Development Begins

The actual development of British Columbia did not begin, however, until the Canadian Pacific Railway reached Vancouver, in 1887, hardly more than a quarter of a century ago. The importance of this medium of transportation to British Columbia can be appreciated when it is known that more has been done in the Province during the past twenty-five years than was done in all the time previous, at least as far back as history records the business affairs of the Province. With the coming of a railway connecting it with the eastern districts of Canada, British Columbia assumed a new character, a sort of identity. The growth of population and the expansion of various industries have resolved British Columbia into three large divisions, which, naturally enough, are described according to the physical formation of the country. First, there is the coast district, including the islands adjacent to the coast; secondly, the great interior plateau, flanked by mountains on the east and west, and forming the southern half of the interior, separated from the plateau by cross-chains of mountains from whence spring the headwaters of the Peace River. This northern part is being opened up by the Grand Trunk Pacific, and is now becoming known as "New British Columbia." Altogether in these three divisions, comprising the entire area of British Columbia, there are some 295,000 square miles. Agriculture was not considered for many years, and even to-day the agricultural resources of British Columbia are not being utilized as they should and yet will be.

Every Coin Has its Jingle

Dr. Bickersteth, vicar of Leeds, inveighed at a vestry meeting against the niggardliness of worshippers at the Leeds Parish Church. People, he said, sat in a stall and contributed little or nothing to the church's expenses. It was really abominable and scandalous. There were people who expected everything for nothing. A churchwarden, endorsing the vicar's regret at the poor response made to the collections, recalled that on a recent Sunday he received from a lady in the stalls the magnificent sum of a halfpenny. "Some people," he said, "think that if they put a copper under the lid we do not know whether it is a shilling or a halfpenny. That is quite a mistake, for every coin is known by its jingle."
