ASSUM DAM.

Mirvellous as are these wonderful structures of a by-gone culture, they sink into insignificance beside the achievements of the present—comparisons are not just. Today is the heir of all the ages, and in the Egypt of modern times is one of the most wonderful of modern structures. This is the Assum Dam on the Nile. Leaving aside all discussion of it from the point of view of the engineer or the builder, it is worth consideration from another side. Since its construction in 1902, when in connection with other irrigation work, it cost about $55,000,000, it is estimated that the value of the land of Middle and Lower Egypt and of the Fyom province has increased from $1,000,000,000, to nearly $2,500,000,000, and the yearly rental from $80,000,000 to nearly $190,000,000. Thus in less than twenty years by regulating the Nile floods and furnishing a constant supply of water for irrigation the actual value of the country has been raised nearly $1,500,000,000 and its rental value by no means $105,000,000. When the Assum Dam was projected many persons thought it an improbable scheme; the predictions of its usefulness have been more than fulfilled.

Copper kettles soon become discolored when they have been in use for any length of time. By cleaning them in the following way, and you will get a beautiful polish: Dip a piece of lemon-wood into a little salt, and rub this well all over the surface of the kettle. Wipe it quickly off and polish with a dry chamois leather.

THE REIGN OF FATHER

Alice looked serious as she turned to her mother.

'Father said I must find the cloak,' 'Certainly that is most important, but with his sanction I will loan Elizabeth mine for the ride, and afterwards we shall have to replace it. Now itemize everything in your wardrobe that you will want for to-morrow evening. Be sure about this, for your father will not permit any variation of the rule, you know, dear.'

'Whatever has got into father? He seems to be mothering us lately.' 'You remember you thought I scolded too much, and he is trying a better method, but be sure he will do as he says.'

An hour later Alice announced everything in readiness for the party on the morrow, for there would be little time after school for preparation. When Mr. Sparling came home, the next evening, Alice told him the whole episode, not shielding herself in the least, but begging for a special permit to go, and telling him of her mother's offer.

'If she is willing to loan hers just for tonight, I will allow you to go,' he said, and then added gravely, 'If you have lost Elizabeth's coat, you will have to replace it out of your own allowance.'

'Goodness' cried Alice, 'it would take me two months to replace it.'

'Yes, fully,' said her mother, 'but you will not lose another, if you sacrifice something to make good this time.'

Alice was dressed before dinner, to all appearances, and her mother smiled approval across the table.

'Where is Arthur?' asked Mr. Sparling.

'He is all ready, but went over to see if he could join the boys at golf early to-morrow morning; he will be back in a minute,' said Alice.

'Yes, I know his measure of minutes, and I just had a message from Mr. Marchmont, saying they would be here early, as it looked like rain, and you must be all ready, as they could not wait.'

Just then the bell rang and somebody called up the tube.

'Please hurry! It is beginning to rain and we went to get to the club house as soon as possible.'

'Oh, mother, I forget that little rip in my gloves, and will you get the opera glasses out of the drawer in the library table?'

Mr. Sparling looked at his wife. She half rose, but he expostulated: 'Mary, this is the only way. Let us be firm.'

The bell rang again, imperatively. 'Alice all ready?' called her father. 'They say they cannot wait.'

'Oh, mother, what shall I do?' The belt has come off my dress, or a hook is gone, and there goes a button off my slippers! The fates are against me, surely. And where is Arthur?'

'Tell them I'll be there, soon,' she called down.

'They cannot wait, Alice, and they want Elizabeth's coat, at once. I will take it downstairs, and Mr. Sparling, taking the coat his wife had loaned, went out to the waiting crowd, and found it had commenced to rain in earnest.'

He had a few hurried words with Mr. Marchmont, who protested.

'Oh, I cannot bear to go without them, but it is now past the hour set, and we shall all be late if we wait any longer. It is for you to decide.'

'Go on, I say!', waved Mr. Sparling, and with a honk, honk, the car whirled away.

At the landing he met Alice, ruffled and hurried, with gloves and veil in hand, and just then the ball door burst open and Arthur tore in. There was a collision on the stairs.

'You are too late, they have gone,' said father.

'Gone?' cried the young people, simultaneously. 'Why, how could they be so cruel!' exclaimed poor Alice. 'And they are not coming back? Oh, father! I know it is all your fault. How could you want to make us so unhappy?' and rushing back into the library, she flung herself into a chair and cried bitterly.

Mr. Sparkling walked up and down helplessly a few moments, then he sought his wife.

'I think Alice needs a little mothering now. I feel like a monster: comfort them my dear.'

The cloak was never found, Jennie was sure the servants had stolen it: Alice was just as sure that Jennie had lost it on the way home; but Alice had to buy another out of her pocket money and it entailed much thought and sacrifice.

Thus began the new era of thinking ahead, and of more care and orderliness. There were many hard lessons to be learned, and careless habits to be overcome.

'And to discover that it was really all my fault is the hardest part of it for me,' said Mrs. Sparkling. 'I could have spared them this lesson of life, if I had begun earlier.' 'We shall think of the little mother now,' laughed Arthur, 'and appreciate her now after the reign of father.'

Japan's National Honor

At Stake.

TOKIO, May 21.—Since the news that the California alien land ownership bill has been signed by Governor Johnson was received here the government has redoubled its efforts to pacify the people in the belief that Washington will find a peaceful solution of the problem. It is felt, however, that it will be difficult to stem the tide of popular anger against the United States as the Japanese generally regard the issue as one involving their national honor.

The bankers and big business men of the country are strongly in favor of moderation, and are bending all their efforts to avoid a conflict, but considerable alarm is evident in official circles at the attitude of the lower classes who seem to desire war on any pretext and in any conditions. The old Samurai spirit appears to be reviving and the emperor and his entourage, bearing in mind the success of the republican movement in China which has had a strong effect upon the peasantry and the workers in the cities of Japan, are more or less afraid to resist it.

Mr. Arthur Bailly-Blanchard, Secretary of the American Embassy, called on the Japanese foreign minister, Baron Nobonki Makino, yesterday and assured him that the United States would do its utmost to find a peaceful solution of the dispute, asserting again that it was not an American but only a California issue.

Emperor of Japan Is Seriously Ill

TOKIO, May, 22 The Emperor Yoshihito of Japan was taken ill today. The physicians in attendance declare he is suffering from inflammation of the lungs.

The Emperor of Japan, who succeeded his father on July 30, 1912, is in his 34th year. He has three sons, the eldest of whom is Crown Prince Hirohito who is just twelve years old.

The Emperor has previously suffered from lung trouble, and in the course of one attack, early in 1908, his condition was very serious.

Emperor Yoshihito is in a state of high fever. Eight court physicians are in constant attendance on him.

THIS RICH YOUTH REFORMS BAD BOYS

Norris Attends the Milwaukee Juvenile Court and Nods if He Wants the Accused

Neil Wells Norris, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, with $1,000,000 has for some years been serving without pay, for the love of boys and humanity, as a volunteer probation and truce officer, and he always attends Juvenile court to hear the stories told by the youthful culprits, having a tacit arrangement with the judge by which the judge, when Norris nods his head, paroles the boys under examination to the care of the young millionaire. One of the probation officers thus describes the millionaire's work:

"Young Mr. Norris is not only spending his time and money on boys who are paroled to him, but he is sending other boys to school. You see, there are many boys who want to go to school, but whose parents are so situated financially that they cannot be allowed to attend. Many of these boys are sent to school by Mr. Norris, who is paying their family the wages that the boy would earn." In a garage, which is probably the finest of its kind in Wisconsin, Mr. Norris has fitted up his "bad boy office." Here, on the second floor, is a room in which the lads report each week to the "volunteer officer." When the reports have been heard the boys are sent downstairs, where a gymnasium has been fitted up for their use. As he sat in his office above the garage Mr. Norris was led to speak of the work he has been doing.

"How did I get into this work?" he asked. "Well, really, I don't know. I just sort of drifted into it. I am fond of boys and used to attend the sessions of the court, and have heard their troubles. I got the idea that maybe I could be of use, and so I just started out. The work is interesting and keeps my mind busy, and there is great possibility for good. I have learned many things. One is that the hardest thing a man who wants to help a boy has to deal with is the boy's parents. I suppose that if the home training was of the best the boy would never get into court, but it is surprising the amount of parental opposition the probation officers are forced to combat. If we could only get the cooperation of the parents the work would be comparatively easy. Another thing I have found out is this: We need some form of corporal punishment which can be administered to boys by officials of the city and state. The average boy who comes before the Juvenile court does not mind reprimand. He thinks that it is sort of a joke to come to court and hear himself 'raked over the coals,' and then be allowed to go. If, however, we had some means of administering some sort of physical punishment I think that the boys might not come to court so often."

TRADE IN TRACTORS

Some Idea of the Volume of Western Machinery Business

One week a special freight train consisting of forty-five flat cars loaded with gasoline tractors arrived in Winnipeg from Minneapolis. The total length of the train was 1,890 feet, and was one of the largest shipments of one agricultural implement ever made in Canada. Each of these gasoline tractors will plow, disc and drill 2,000 acres in a season, so that the total acreage covered by the forty-five tractors would amount to 90,000 acres. It is also estimated that each engine will travel 3,000 miles in a season. The tractors are all thirty horsepower and identical in every way. The value of the shipment was $175,000, while the duty amounted to $24,000, and the freight charges $3,150. The train went to Regina, where one-half of the engines were unloaded, the other half going to Saskatoon.
