Peroxide for Cleaning Straw Hats

The following will be found preferable to salts of lemon, oxalic acid, etc., for cleaning straw hats and panamas. Procure from your chemist a small quantity of peroxide of hydrogen. To clean the straw use an old tooth-brush and rub the peroxide well in; rinse the hat with cold water, and dry it in the open air. The straw will become beautifully white and will not turn yellow.

To Remove Fish Bone from the Throat.

To remove a fish bone from the throat, cut a lemon in half and suck the juice slowly. This will dissolve the fish bone and give instant relief.

Canon Troop Asks Parents To Defend Censors.

(Montreal Witness.)

Canon Troop, preaching in St. Martin's Church on Sunday night, strongly defended the Board of Censors in its efforts to keep the moving picture shows from impurity and degradation.

"All upright men and women," he said, "and notably all parents, should give the censors every moral support and encouragement in their difficult, but noble work. Moving pictures could obviously be a most valuable means of education and refined amusement. Why should we allow the presentation of films calculated to pollute the minds of people, old or young? Why should impure suggestions be regarded as necessary for the entertainment of otherwise sane men and women? It is a madness altogether to God."

Canon Troop said that he knew one of the censors personally, and felt assured that they were all men of honor, who fortunately for us, could not be bought. It was natural that their action should arouse determined opposition, but the whole moral force of the community should stand with them.

New York Herald: The Rev. Theodor Sedgwick, rector, and the chor of Calvary Church, Fourth avenue and Twenty-first street, furnished an innovation in the Episcopal religious sphere of this city Sunday night by holding a street procession to Madison Square, with services in Salvation Army style. For two summers Calvary has held Sunday evening services outdoors in front of the edifice, but this is the first time rector and choir have ventured any distance from home into the "high ways and hedges" of the city. When the outdoor services were begun the choir boys went on strike against singing in the open air. Sunday night's "street walk," as it is called, was considered distasteful by some of the choir and they expressed an intention to stay away but the rector had announced that they were hired by the church to sing, and if they did not see fit to obey instructions they might look for other positions.

Decked Horses Bought For The Army.

LONDON June 19—Replying wood in the House of Commons yesterday, Secretary of War Seely said as few as possible decked horses were being purchased for the army. An order had been issued, the War Secretary said, that no horses so decked, should be accepted after three years.

SAVED THIRTY-SIX LIVES

Tay Bridge Hero Won Admiration of Mr. Carnegie

The man of whom Andrew Carnegie said "You are the bravest man I have ever met," died at Sunderland, England. Mr. Harry Watt was a fearless diver, and one of the most unassuming of heroes.

Born at Sunderland in 1826, "Harry" took a leading part in diving operations throughout the kingdom for over half a century. He was summoned to Tay Bridge after the great disaster, and his services were frequently requisitioned abroad.

Altogether he saved thirty-six persons from drowning. On eight occasions he was presented with medals—three by the Board of Trade for exceptional gallantry in saving life.

His fellow-townsmen gave "Harry" a gold watch and other gifts at various times. Some three years ago, when Mr. Andrew Carnegie was spending a few days in Sunderland, he specially sent for "Harry," and confessed himself honored at meeting with the hardy old veteran.

Learning that the diver and his wife were in none too prosperous circumstances, Mr. Carnegie, the same day, directed the trustees of the Carnegie Hero Fund to allow Mr. Watt $25 per month for life, and to continue the allowance to his widow until her death.

The late General Booth and Watt were great friends, and "Harry" never tired of talking about the "great general."

Huge Price for Horse

M. Edmond Blanc bought the race horse The White Knight from W. R. Wyndham for the huge price of 40,000 guineas, the equivalent of $200,000 in our money. Some years back M. Blanc paid $189,500 for Plying Fox at public auction, which, until this later transaction, was the greatest sum ever paid for a thoroughbred. To secure a successor to the dead Plying Fox he set a new price record in paying this extraordinary sum for one of the greatest stayers of modern English turf history. The White Knight is a son of Desmond and Pella, representing the St. Simon line.
