B., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my two little ones and think they are just what children need. I would not be without them." The Time To House Your Bees Draws Near.

Watch the weather closely after the middle of November. If there comes a nice warm day or two about that time followed by indications of a cold snap, then rush your bees in on the first cool day. It will be better to get them in a little too soon than to allow them to get a severe chilling on their summer stands.

Don't attempt to winter your bees in an upper room or attic. You will probably lose them if you do. Most any cellar is a better place. You will probably not have ideal conditions but get as near to it as possible. Ideal conditions are: A uniform temperature of 45 degrees Fahr.; a slight amount of moisture; continuous ventilation and absolute darkness.

PREPARING THE CELLAR FOR THE BEES

If you have but 10 or 20 colonies of bees it will be well to darken a small corner of the cellar either by building a board partition or hanging up a blanket. Arrange a bench, upon which to place the first tier of hives, that will be at least a foot above the floor. If there are mice or rats in the cellar build the bench so they cannot climb upon it.

PREPARING THE HIVES.

Carry the hives in and place them upon this bench with entrances toward the wall. DO NOT ALLOW THE HIVES TO TOUCH THE WALL ON ANY SIDE. Remove the cover and put in its place two or three thicknesses of old burlap or sacks. Raise the hive from the bottom-board at the back, and put a bit of lath under each corner.

If the hives are to be tiered up, then space the first tier so that the hives of the second tier will cover not more than a third of each of the two beneath it.

The cellar windows and doors should be left open the first night after setting the bees in the cellar.
