Doll's House of Cardboard

A hat box of strong cardboard and some red, white and green water-color paints are required to make this doll's house. A view of it is given in the picture above, also a picture of the roof and of the front and one side. The roof and chimneys are to be made separately.

Two large, square openings are cut out at the front and above them an oblong is cut on three sides. Bent outward this forms an awning that is painted in red and white stripes. A door is cut in the side and panels and doorknobs painted on it. Openings are cut in the roof to hold the chimneys and it is painted in green squares to simulate shingles.

The house and chimneys are painted red, lined with white to simulate bricks. White paper pasted over the windows will look like a shade. After the parts are made they are fastened together with paper fasteners.

EXPLORERS HAVE KNACK OF DECEIVING PUBLIC

Many Thought Dead Eventually Lived Up At Odd Moments—A Life of Risk

Stefansson, the Canadian explorer, who turned up in such dramatic fashion, would be the last person to confess that he was ever lost. True, he lost his ship, but as he could not sail he and his companions continued their journey afoot, and, going northwards over the ice, found a new land full of game. Since, however, they were not heard of for two long years, it is small wonder that they were given up as lost, and that their unexpected return provided a startling sensation. Too often, when a party ventures into the Arctic wastes, no trace is ever again found of them or their doings. There was Andree, for instance, who attempted to reach the North Pole in a balloon. Although, in 1908, it was rumored that his grave had been found in the wilds of Labrador, the story was never confirmed. His fate and that of his companions is still unknown.

There was Sir John Franklin, who sailed north in 1845. More money was spent on the attempt to discover his fate than on any similar purpose. It was not until fourteen years later that McClintock found relics showing that Franklin had died, and that his whole party had perished of cold and hunger.

Missing For Six Years

David Livingstone started on his last great journey into the heart of the Dark Continent in 1865. It was not until November, 1871, that Stanley found him. More recently another missionary, Mr. Daniel Crawford, vanished into the heart of Africa, and was given up for dead. As a matter of fact, he was a prisoner in the hands of the black Napoleon, Mushiidi. Mushiidi, with his wife and two slaves, had penetrated into the Nalanga country, and set up a huge slave-dealing city, with—as Mr. Crawford says—a population of not less than a hundred thousand.

"Life there was awful," writes the missionary. "Hills of skulls all over the place, and executions daily in full swing. Blood of babies, blood of women, blood of old men—frightful murders committed with unspeakable barbarity." One day a strange flag was seen. The Belgians appeared. The great mushroom empire was scattered, and the terrible Mushiidi was slain to which he had devoted all his life.

many. His head, which was shaped, was cut off, and sent to a London museum in an old petroleum tin. After twenty-three years the wild Mr. Crawford returned to England.

An Uninviting Country

Even today, inland New Guinea is one of the world's dark spots. The country is a nightmare of gigantic precipices, huge ravines, great swamps, and soaking forests. In 1901 the Danish explorer Petersen, with three companions, dived deep into the heart of this unknown country. They were captured by a tribe of savages, who killed their carriers, and made them prisoners. For long they were believed to be dead. Then, to everyone's amazement, a letter in Petersen's writing was brought by a native to the coast. It told of his miserable plight, and an expedition was at once sent inland to bring him home.

An Unknown Fate

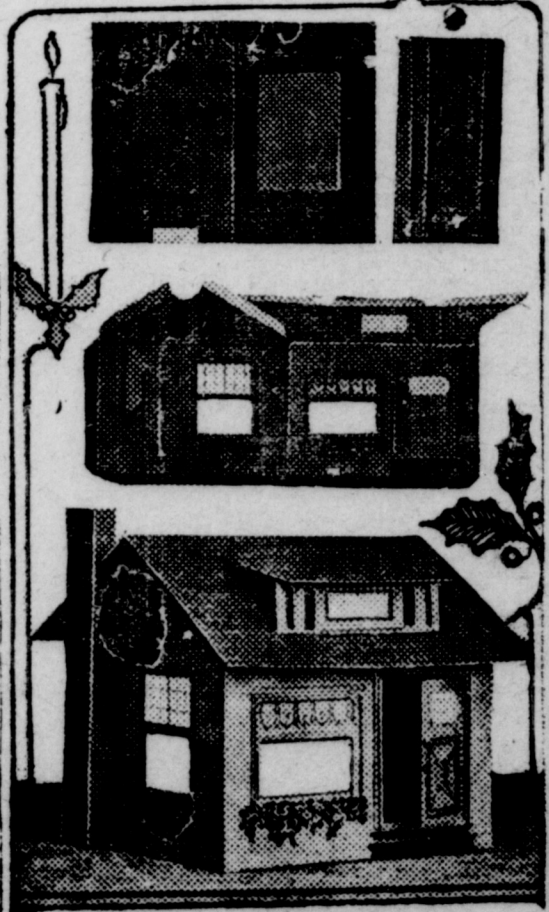

Somewhat similar was the case of Bonnavalli, the wealthy young Italian scientist, who, at his own expense, took an expedition into the heart of the Sahara Desert. His idea was to reach Timbuctoo by a new route. His party was well armed and equipped, but in the heart of the great waste a huge force of the murderous Touaregs, the masked bandits of the desert, fell upon the expedition. The native servants were all speared with out mercy, but the lives of the white men, sixteen in all, were spared, and they became slaves. That we know these facts at all is due to two letters in Monsieur Bonnavalli's own writing, which have somehow come from hand to hand out of the wilds.

But, although efforts have been made for the purpose, to-day no one knows for certain whether the explorer and his friends are still alive in slavery, or whether their bones whiten the desert.

A Nasty Come-back

Mr. Bryan, America's ex-Secretary of State, has told a story of how one of his political enemies got even with him. There was a mass meeting which was presided over by a man with whom he had crossed swords several times. There was a real feud between the two, and when Bryan ascended the platform the presiding officer paid no attention to him. At last it came time to introduce Bryan, and the chairman walked over to him and blandly inquired: "What is your name, please?" "William Jennings Bryan," he said. "Bryan? Ah, yes," said the chairman; "and what do you do, Mr. Bryan, sing or speak?"

Bungalow Made of Cardboard

Bungalows and other toy houses are made of heavy cardboard boxes. The picture shows the roof, chimney, front and one side of the bungalow before they are put together, also the finished house.

The windows are cut out and plain white writing paper pasted over the openings on the inside. The window panes and sashes are painted on this. Doors are cut on three sides and panels and knobs painted on them. Doorsteps, window boxes and flower boxes, etc., are all painted on the flat surface.

The chimney is made separately, painted red, and lined with white.

CANNY ADVICE.

At a time when the Scots had considerably less love for their southern neighbors than in these days a father, taking leave of his son, said: "Son ye ma bairn, ye're a'oot tae gang up tae London. Tak' a' th' siller ye can frae the English—tak' everything ye can frae them. But mind ye, Sandy, they're a braw fatchin' people so be careful wi' them. Never fecht a bald man, far ye canna catch him by th' hair."

Campbell-Greer

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Greer Mt. Pleasant, Dec. 8th, when their daughter Gussie was united in marriage to Addington Campbell of Gordenville. The bride came out leaning on her father's arm. They were married under an arch of evergreen decked with white roses and tinsel. The bride was dressed in white silk chiffon over messaline satine, she and carried a bouquet of orange blossoms. Her little flower girls were her little sister and cousin they were dressed in pale blue silk. The groom's present to the bride was a set of furs his presents to the flower girls was a locket and chain and a bracelet.

A very large number of relatives and friends were invited, one hundred and nine were present. The bride received a great many costly and useful presents.

The brides travelling suit was of navy blue charmeuse satin with coat and hat to match.

The wedding march was very beautifully played by Miss Gladys Clark.

Rev. G. A. Giberson of Bath was the officiating minister.

Giberson-Reeeder

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Crane of Bath, was the scene of a quiet but pretty wedding when Mrs. Crane's sister Alice Reeeder was united in marriage to Armond Giberson of Bath. Rev. G. A. Giberson father of the groom performed the ceremony. The bride was becomingly attired in a travelling suit of green broadcloth trimmed with fur.

Miss Dora Tompkins rendered the wedding march.

The bride received some costly presents. After the ceremony luncheon was served. The young couple took the four o'clock train for a honeymoon trip.

Mr. Percy Wilbur

The death is announced of Mr. Percy Wilbur, Bathurst, aged 53 years. He was for many years the proprietor of the Wilbur House in that town, and as such was well and favorably known to the travelling public.—St. John Globe.
