A Juggernaut
At The Front

London, Sept. 18.—(By Hall Caine.)—Vill war itself, which hitherto has resisted the efforts of twenty millions of men on all fronts to bring it to end, which has withstood all the physical forces of incalculable masses of munitions as well as the economic strain of unparalleled national debts and the mighty pressure of the moral sense of the world, be terminated at last by its own terrors?

For weeks past I have been hearing whispers of a new arm which would shortly be launched on the battlefields which would drive everything before it. News of it was a secret not to be revealed until the day it came into action.

Nobody was to know where or how it was made or yet what it was. The men who manufactured it were bound by oath not to say anything about it. To make assurance doubly sure they were interned within a vast area whose boundaries were guarded by armed men every hundred yards. Once within, they were never allowed out. Notices posted at the entrances warned intending intruders they would be shot at sight.

Then I heard that the new weapon had already reached the scene of operations in large numbers and that yet greater numbers were to follow. If the enemy was to hear anything about it at all they must hear now. In a few days more it would be in action. The results which might be expected would be stupendous. It was impossible not to be stirred by the mystery that surrounded the new arm and by the perfect confident faith of those who knew of its irresistible power. It was a gigantic car, a colossal Juggernaut, a moving arsenal of unimaginable driving force. Nothing could stand before it. It would pass over trenches like flat grounds, climb out of beds of river, and walk over houses as over ant hills.

In the inferno of its interior the men who worked it, nearly nude, would be safe from almost any force known to military science, except that of the unconquerable monster they controlled. Such was the story whispered during the past weeks to those who could be trusted to keep the secret until the day came to reveal it. The secret has now been revealed in Sir Douglas Haig's despatch and we may perhaps look for still greater, more momentous results.

If what is said of the new armored car be true, it may prove to be the mightiest argument for a speedy termination of the war that has yet been heard of in this blood stained continent.

I am told the power of this new Juggernaut is such that if it rolled up Broadway and was directed at the flat iron building, it would bring it down and roll out at the other side almost as rapidly as I tell the tale.

I am also told that if we had three thousand new Juggernauts they would end the war in a month. It sounds like a dream. Some will surely say it sounds like madness, but few or none can be skeptical of this tremendous story as not at least to hope for the sake of humanity and future world peace that, please God, it may be true.

(A despatch from British headquarters on Saturday, said, referring to Friday's fight.

"Among the prisoners are six colonels, one of whom was captured by the new weapon, which has added picturesqueness to present day warfare. This armored car ran over the colonel's dug out. He surrendered to the crew which took him on board and later delivered him to a guard of Infantry. In one case 100 Germans surrendered in a body to one of the armored motors."
