Coun. Smith—The water works account has also been pretty well collected.

Coun. Fisher had a grievance. He had been asked to pay $6 for the water he would use on work on Mrs. S. Pugley's cottage, while John Colten would use more water in connection with the Jamieson building.

Coun. Smith, the chairman of the water committee, said that he was unable to find Supt. Fields at the time he wanted him, and he made the arrangements with Mr. Colten, but he would leave such matters to Mr. Fields in future.

A Peerless Soldier who Organized Victory.

(Toronto Sunday World).

Kitchener's army is the greatest monument that the greatest general of his own generation will have. Kitchener's army represents the devotion, the admiration and the trust that Great Britain had for her latest military hero. Long before Khartoum or Omdurman Kitchener had begun to be a centre for the stories that are told of the typical great soldier of the day. His habits, his methods, his philosophy, his absolute concentration on duty were novel characteristics. He stood for new ideals of military life, and his ascetic absorption in his profession was the subject of all kinds of comment and jest. He began at the Woolwich Royal Military College when he was 18 and saw some of the France-Prussian war from an angle which turned him into the most magnificent organizer that British military experience has produced. He learned the lesson that mere bravery, however, undaunted, cannot win battles. So he organized victory, and his campaigns were planned to the last detail, and carried out as planned. Cyprus, Palestine, Egypt, the Sudan, South Africa, India, Australia and New Zealand all felt his military hand. Probably Canada would have experienced it also had the government been willing. His last task was to organize victory over the Germans. He said it would take three years. He has doubtless made all things ready, and there will be a great regret that he has not lived to see the result of his labors. He will be remembered when the treaty is signed that brings peace and freedom to the world once more, as one who was a bringer of peace, and of the good tidings that follow it. After Khartoum the monument he asked was a school to teach his beaten foes. He would have asked no less for the conquered Germans. His name and fame shine like the stars, and he gave his life for his country.
