Germany Lost
8 Submarines

Athens, Dec. 26—(Correspondence)—Field Marshal Earl Kitchener left to-day a vivid impression on the Athens population and especially on Constantine I., king of the Greeks. Speaking of the British war minister visit the Greek monarch said to the Associated Press correspondent:

I am a soldier. Kitchener is a soldier. We speak the same language, and we understood one another perfectly."

One story which Lord Kitchener told at Athens, made a particularly deep impression. No public account of the incident had ever been given.

When the manoeuvres of the great fleet were held about a month ago, north of Scotland," said Lord Kitchener, "eight German submarines of the newest and strongest type went out with the purpose of getting to the fleet and playing havoc with the manoeuvres. One came to within our North Sea net. The others nosed through and approached the fleet. But there was another net heading them off. They tried to break through to get around to find an opening. But there was none. Two more were lost in this effort.

"Finally the remainder decided to return to their base at Heligoland. But they could no longer find the way out. The gate in the net had been closed. Two were lost desperately trying to get through. The remaining three finally forced to come to the surface and surrender themselves. We took them intact, crews, submarine and all.

Another declaration of the British war minister, made to General Dousmanis, the chief of the Greek general staff, was less favorably received in Athens.

"Suppose the Germans do conquer Egypt," he is credited with saying. "Suppose they extend their line throughout Turkey and hold the Euphrates Valley. Suppose they take India, what then we shall get it all back when we defeat the Germans in France. The war is not going to be fought out in Egypt or in India, or the Balkans. It is going to be fought out in Germany."

King Constantine's only comment was:

"It was all very well for England to talk about what she will get back at the war's end. But the Greeks live in the Balkans."

German Espionage
Startlingly Illustrated

The thoroughness of German espionage is strikingly illustrated by a Paris story of a beggar who had stood for seven years with a tray of nuts suspended round his neck. Gossip said he was an English officer who had been ruined by a famous actress. As people watched him, suddenly there came a typical Paris gamin, evidently drunk. He cannoned against the seller of nuts, whose ware were flung broadcast by the contact. Instead of apologizing he thrust a hand through his hair. The seller of nuts looked wozned with rage. The gamin wheeled round and spelt in his face—and like a flash, the seller of nuts became a soldier—an officer—a gentleman—a spy! The soldiers closed round him—that volley of horrible cursings was in pure high German. The gamin was a famous French detective and the seller of nuts a Prussian nobleman.

EVERYBODY SHOULD BE
OWN POULTRY FARMER

When Eggs Are Scarce They Are Plentiful With You—Occupy the Pleasant Time

Sign up again! So signs the distressed housewife—and avoids eggs. The remedy is for each of us to be his or her own poultry farmer, keep hens in our backyards, and grow our own eggs. It's quite simple. Even the smallest backyard will be large enough for the purpose.

In the first place, of course, you will only keep hens to supply eggs for your own household, and not for sale. Then six or eight fowls will suffice. Carefully chosen, these should yield a thousand or more eggs each year, individual birds of good strain laying fully 300 eggs each in twelve months.

The run may be quite a small affair. You don't need a large wired-up henyard. Give them reasonable room, and make them work; that's the motto of the modern hen keeper. For half a dozen fowls, a combined house and run of six feet by four is quite large enough.

The roof should project well over the front, to keep off rain. The inside of the hen house should all be gone over with lime wash, applied hot, at least twice a year, choosing a sunny "drying" day for the operation.

The last thing you have to attend to in the housing line is the arrangements for the hens laying. For this an orange box, with two of the top pieces knocked out, serves admirably.

Cheesing the Fowls

The house is ready; now for the hens. Suitable strains for this "intensive" poultry farming are white or black leghorns, anconas, or white wyandottes.

The best and cheapest method is to start with three pullets and three hens in their second season. Then, next year, you dispose of the older birds and buy three pullets, and so on, always renewing half the number yearly. To avoid trouble with the neighbors, do not buy a cockerel; he's ornamental, but not necessary.

As to the diet of hens. For their breakfast give them soft mash, warm and mixed to a crumbly state. This mixture may consist of household scraps, scalded bran, and sharps. The scraps should be well minced.

When Eggs Scarce

A word as to the most common ailment to which hens are subject, the common cold. When the birds begin to sneeze, and have a watery discharge at the eyes, give them roup powders, and put a little permanganate of potash in the water. Should you suspect anything more serious, it is wiser and more economical to destroy the fowl, to prevent disease spreading.

CANADA'S FORESTS

Hard to Estimate But Task is Being Attempted

According to R. H. Campbell, director of the Dominion Forestry Branch, Canada's supply of commercial timber has been variously estimated to be between five hundred and seven hundred billion feet, board measure, and to cover an area of approximately 170,000,000 acres. This estimate of quantity and area refers only to timber of commercial value as saw timber. It does not include pulpwood, firewood, tie and pole material nor small timber of any description, although this has undoubtedly a very large commercial value. The Commission of Conservation is engaged upon an investigation of the forest resources of Canada, which, when completed, will furnish the basis for a more accurate estimate of the amount of timber in the various sections of the country than has previously been practicable.

Japan Conserves Forests

Japan exports more timber than any other country in the world. She imports more than any other country. Korea and parts of China and Europe, Australia and the United Kingdom consume most of the lumber exported, although the United States takes large quantities of oak. The large timbers used in Japan come from the Pacific Northwest of Canada. Conservation methods work successfully in Japan and complete reforestation of denuded areas can be accomplished in from 30 to 100 years. Reforestation was commenced in Japan about 30 years ago and the system is now nearly complete.

Fishcatchers Have Small Eyes

The reason why a fish diet is so good for brain workers is because fish contains a certain amount of phosphorus, which is excellent for the brain. It is a curious fact, by the way, that the frequent eating of fish affects the size of the eyes. Among native tribes who live very largely on a fish diet, it will be found that their eyes are much smaller than is the case with meat eaters.

If a man falls into the water and splashes, a shark will wait until he finishes splashing before trying to eat him.
