Germans Trying To Raise New Army

Petrograd, Sept. 20.—(Despatch to the London Morning Post).—The public is now pretty well calmed regarding the possibility of a German dash upon Petrograd. Nevertheless, the evacuation of the city is being urged forward energetically for a variety of sufficient reasons.

The Germans will certainly not attempt to reach Petrograd by land this year. Apart from a roadless terrain of bogland, impassable during the rainy seasons of the year, this operation would require at least 400,000 men even supposing the Germans met with no opposition on their march. If the exhausted man-power of the Germans can raise for service on the Eastern front a half million more fighting men which is a very large presumption, there is considerable doubt whether they would regard the possession of Petrograd as an objective worth such an extraordinary effort at this stage of the war.

The Germans are, nevertheless undoubtedly making strenuous efforts to raise another army. I hear that extraordinary measures of the last desperation have been taken to raise more men, for garrisons in the interior of Germany are being drawn off to the front and replaced by furks. These are cheaper to feed and can be reckoned on to deal with merciless severity with any internal disorders.

For what special object of the war has Germany constrained herself to take this desperate measure? It is believed here that she hopes to complete that which even the appalling exodus of Russians from Galicia did not allow of fulfillment partly owing to the Germans' want of men on the spot and more owing to General Korniloff's drastic treatment of his soldiery, which produced a very fair resistance after a while to the further advance of the enemy.

Germany, since America has come in to the war, feels more than ever the need of those rich, extensive corn lands that once were the granary of Europe. If Germany can raise another half million men for use on this side, it is believed that they will set on the task of seizing rich corn lands of Russia's black earth zone.

Cigaristics.

(From Punch.)

["According to an enterprising American scientist a man's character can be told from the way he smokes a cigar."—Weekly Paper.]

For instance, a man who snatches a cigar from somebody else's mouth and smokes it himself may be assumed to be of a grasping disposition.

The man who while smoking a cigar burns his fingers is a man of few words and quick of action. "Lumbers never burn their fingers like that.

The man who smokes his cigar right through without removing it from his mouth is a deep thinker. Lord Northcliffe always smokes one cigar right through before deciding what England really wants, and two when he has to decide which Cabinet Minister must go.

The man who accepts a cigar from a friend, lights it, sniffs and drops it behind his chair has no character worth mentioning.

Haig Again Hits The Germans Hard

London, Oct. 9.—The British attack on a wide front northeast of Ypres this morning the War Office announces and satisfactory progress is being made everywhere. The attack, the statement says was made "in conjunction with our allies."

(The new British drive is being made in the same region as the attack of last Thursday, one of the most successful British efforts of the war. On that day the Germans were expelled from high ground along the ridge east of Ypres, giving the British dominating positions of great strategic importance. The wedge in the German line has been driven so deep that with the high ground lost their position has been made most unfavorable and another "strategic retreat" has been predicted. Recent despatches from the British front however, told of heavy rains and deep mud, conditions under which ordinarily a renewal of the offensive would not be expected. The decision of the British staff to return to the attack so quickly may indicate a purpose to force a decision before the cold weather sets in, or before the Germans have recovered from the last blow, which appeared to have partially demoralized them.

Mutinies In German Navy

Berne, Switzerland, Oct. 11.—A naturalized American citizen of Berne, who escaped to Switzerland from a German seaport in order to evade military service, as the Germans refused to recognize the legality of his naturalization, declared to the Associated Press yesterday that the events to which Admiral von Capelle referred yesterday in the Reichstag include the sailor organizations on many ships, which dismantled and threw guns overboard, assaulted officers and refused to obey orders. The mutineers, he said, were quickly checked and a majority of them shot.

Although the movement was entirely suppressed, it was asserted the dissatisfaction in the navy had been in nowise subdued. The American said he had visited many seaports and conversed with the sailors, and that he was aware of the mutinous spirit of the men before the rumors of disaffection began to spread. He added that the movement was not limited to the navy, but it flourishes in certain regiments in which mutinies have occurred.

POISON WARNING

An Attachment to a Bottle Rings a Bell

Some time in the still, dark night, somebody, the wife, the baby or yourself may get suddenly ill, and somebody will hurry to the medicine chest, or the pantry shelf, or wherever the medicine bottles are kept. In the darkness a poison bottle may be grasped and carried to the sick room, and in the hurry incidental to sudden illness a dose may be administered—and a funeral held later on. Or there may be medicines that must never be given to children.

Bell bottles—that's by way of warning. Get a number of tiny bells, and fasten a bell to each bottle containing poison or any medicine which may have a serious effect if taken unintentionally. Possibly a good way would be to tie two bells to the poison bottles, to distinguish the very dangerous ones from the others, the taking of which wouldn't be quite so serious. The ringing of the bell will then prevent you from making a fatal mistake.

NEED OF ECONOMY

Winnipeg Paper Urges Saving in Domestic and Social Life

The question arises how Canada is going to live through the present ordeal, and the reply is that up to the present extraordinary financing has not caused a ripple on the surface. The entire domestic and social life of the country goes on as though there was no war in Europe and no preparation for military struggle in Canada. It is true that Canada has made a complete new record in its savings in the banks, but it is equally true that it is also making a new record in extravagant domestic expenditure. Far too much money is being wasted and spent by people who cannot afford it.

Many prominent business men in Winnipeg have sought ever since the commencement of the war to give an example of economy, and the accounts in the savings banks do indicate that there has been a disposition to save in many quarters. The contemplation of the unprecedented extravagance being practiced by certain elements of the community should lead to still further activity on the part of the more thoughtful and reflecting citizens and to a further prosecution on the part of the banks of the work of circulating literature incalculating saving and the practice of rigid economy. From Press, Winnipeg, Oct. 11.

Don't Climb the Ladder

A step ladder is an awkward thing to trail about from place to place. Let's not trail it any longer. Put casters on each of its four legs and push it around. You'll find it's a whole lot easier.

Wire Netting Fence

The wire netting on the chicken yard fence gives a lot of trouble every often. It sags and is difficult to fasten to the board frame. A new way of putting it up has been found. Don't use a board frame.

When your fence posts are up good and firm, instead of adding rails on them, string them, top and bottom, with heavy wire. Then stretch your netting and fasten it to this wire frame with hooks made of the same wire.

It's the simplest and easiest way to put up a wire netting fence, and if it is properly stretched when put on there will be no sagging.
