

DISPATCH EXTRA.

THE JURY DISAGREE IN THE LEIGHTON-CROCKET LIBEL SUIT.

The jury retired at 7.15 last evening.

At 9.15 they returned and Mr. Farley announced that the jury could not agree. They were then discharged.

The addresses of Mr. McLeod for the defence, and of the Attorney General occupied all the afternoon. An adjournment was made until 6.30, when the judge delivered a short, but most concise charge. He closed his charge with this instruction. You first will want to consider, did the plaintiff publish the article, if he did was it libellous in the sense in which the crown said it was, that is did it have the meaning by innuendo, or otherwise as stated in the indictment. If you find it does not, your verdict should be for the defendant. If you find it does, then you are to proceed to inquire whether the plea is made out or not; if made out, and proved, I direct you as a matter of law in view of what the Attorney General has said of the article being in the public interest, that you should give a verdict for the defendant; if not, your verdict should be for the crown.

After the jury announced their decision, the judge asked them if there was any chance of their agreeing. Mr. Farley replied: "We are divided, your honor, and I do not think there is any possibility of our coming to an agreement."

The Attorney General intimated that the case might be tried again this court.

TO IDENTIFY THEM.

Town Marshall Gibson received a dispatch from H. V. Dalling, who is in Vanceboro, to come there immediately and identify two men supposed to be those who broke into Small & Fisher's office on Friday night. Mr. Gibson left on the night train.
