The Cloud in the East.

For two or three days disturbing rumour flew thickly about. There was a feeling that war was "in the air." and that it was as certain to come as the deluge of rain from the black cloud. The sky is clearer now, but there is no saying how soon it may become overclouded again and the deluge fall in earnest. The Eastern question must be settled sometime, and the sooner for the enduring peace of the world the better. It may be taken as certain that the Porte will never carry out the administrative reforms in Asia Minor to which it is pledged by the Berlin Treaty. The Sultan may issue "hatti scheriffs," proclaiming the equality of his Christian with his Mahommedan subjects, but he cannot change the nature of the Turks or make them respect the rights of the "infidel dogs." The Empire is gangrened with corruption and shaken by violence, the nances are in a deplorable condition, and to upport the extravagant "court" and the exurious Pashas, the last copec must be wrung from the unhappy people.

By a fatality the Sultan is driven to maintain the old corrupt rule. He very willingly agreed to introduce reforms, but he had no intention of fulfilling his treaty obligations. He trusted that it was sufficient to promise reform, and that the British Government would not insist that his ministers should carry it out in good faith. But when the Layard, presses him hard, he prevaricates and evades his promise, and shows a disposition to throw himself into the arms of the Mahmoud Nezim Pasha, the notorious friend of Russia, Grand Vizer, and when remontion by making him Minister of the Interior: Malta to Constantinople
