ASHURST

THE DAYS THAT ARE NOT!

BY MRS. H. HILTON BROOM. The driver held in his hand a stick or which were many notches of various sizes these were to signify how many of the men under his charge were large, how manny middle, and how many small sized and he and his mistress were both endeavoring to impress upon the tailor the advantage of making the coats with wide fronts and roomy armholes, while that snip who had served his apprenticeship to a city tailor and thought he knew far more than either of his instructors, talked of rules and measures and slopes in a superior manner. At length, however, his arrangements were made. The bales of light woollen stuff were unrolled, measured and cut, buttons, thread and needles were provided, and then the seamstress had her turn for the women's clothes of striped blue homespunclothes, which when cut, each woman was expected to make for herself, helped if needs were by the seamstress and he girls; only for the new born babies Mrs. Selwyn provided carefully made garments not trusting their comfort to their mothers' clumsy fingers. Now, if Janet had been a thoughtful young person, she would as she sat on her step have noticed how much method and arrangement there was in all this. and have wondered at the quiet, easy way in which this calmold lady was ordering and providing, months beforehand, for the wants of three hundred people but Janet was, as we said, too used to it to be struck by the administrative faculty displayed, and only wished that Daddy Zeno and Mom Affy (Anglic, Minerva) would hurry, and let her make her request. At length, however, the clother business was finished' and before the plantation nurse succeded with her audience, Janet struck in.

Dear grandma, I am going over to Buckstone for my lessons, and please let me stay to-morrow; it will be Saturday, you know, and Hurr Mulle will have time to play for me in the morning, and we shall have a dance at night.'

'A dance at night,' echoed Mrs. Selwyn. Why then when will you come back?"

'On Sunday, grandma; I can meet you at church and come home. Don't you think that we had better fix regular days for my going to Uncle Ralph's, for since she lets me stay I must be honest and work, you know. Tuesdays and Fridays I think will be best. 'Very well, my pet, if you like it; and you can stay this week, only next Friday you must bring the Buckstone girls home with you, and the boys can come over on

'That's my own grannie,' said Janet, kissing her. 'Any commands for Aunt Caroline?

'No-only-yes, Cupid brought in two fine turkeys this morning, you can take one over, and a leg of that lamb, (they have very few sheep at Buckstone.) 'Mercy, grandma,' Janet broke in laugh ing.' You know Zack will have my valise and books, and there are limits to even Dumple's carrying powers, don't give him anything more.

said the grandmother, as gathering up her keys, she prepared to descend to her well stocked storeroom.

Half an hour latter, Janet, mounted on her pretty highbred mare, Queen Mab, was cantering along a shady country road followed by a servant with a small valise strapped behind his saddle, a large wild turkey tied by the legs hanging at his left side and a basket of fresh butter on his right arm—the young lady herself, in mercy to his over-loaded condition, having hung the leather satchel containing her books on her own pommel. Janet went her way gaily, but her squire soon found something wrong with his steed which was not the steady going Dumple but a spirited young horse which the coachman had ordered him to take out for exercise. Embarrassed with his basket, and especially with the turkey, which thumped uncomfortably, as he galloped his horse to keep up with Queen Mab, Zack did not first venture to dismount, but finding the gait become worse and ly. 'You can shoot from her back.' worse, he at last reined up and found that the hoof, while it was at the same time

'What is the matter?' asked Janet, coming back. Zack explained. The risk to the horse increased with every step that it took. 'Massa' would be 'firy mad, if any harm came to it, and he (Zack) knew not what to do. .

Janet decided instantly.

Zack must get down and lead Robin stick, Hood home at a walk, while she herself went on alone to Buckstone, and he must bring over her things on another horse as soon as possible.

He entreated her to re turn home also.

Janet was positive. . What in the world should harm her? She knew everybody, black and white, in the neighborhood, and as for the Queen, she could manage her any day;' and the young sovereign rode off repeating the order Getloff, and lead him every step of the way home.' An order which Zack obey ed negro fashion by dismounting when he came in sight of the Ashurst gates.

'You must go home now, sir, because you are so wet, but I hope that I shall see you again. I am Miss Berkley, and my grandfather, Mr. Selwyn, will wish to thank you for helping me to day. Will you tell me your name?'

He howed low, and answered, 'My name is Hugh Carlton, Miss Berkley, and I am staying here with my cousin, Mr. Vincent but I beg that you will say no more of the slight service which I have done to day.' 'Thank you again,' she answered, bending her head, and then finally rode away.

Hugh Carlton stood looking after her. 'Now I wonder,' said he to himself, 'which is the real person? 'A dragon, Janet?' said little Sophy Selwyn, in an awe-struck voice. 'A truefor-true dragon!'

'Well, you might call it a snake.' 'There's hardly water enough in Vincent's Creek to drown a cat,' said Allan Selwyn contemptuously, 'nor a snake in the country that could kill anything bigger than a bluejay. If the knight matches the rest of the story, Janet, he is probably checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a
