Goldwin Smith on "Canada and the United States."

racter of peacemaker between Canada and the United States in the July number of the sult "North American Review." He is evidently bent on bringing them together by some he but lived to see one nation on the great the idea propagated some three months' ago in the pages of the same serial by Sir Francis Canada, forming a political cabal or conspiracy, who are intent on compassing an object-annexation of course-and to show that the movement afoot in Canada for commercial union with the United States, is a perfectly natural one, essentially economic and not political, that "it is not the offspring of intrigue but the behest of Nature," and that those who take part in it-strictly commercial men and journalists who are not actuated by political ambition-are no more agitators than Sir Francis himself. He easily forgets that the commercial union of which he is a strong supporter, is but the first step to political union, and that those who, in Canada, are perpetually mooting the matter are more like working towards annexation He and they may be acquitted of a desire by loud demagogue acts, and intemperate agitation, to precipitate events, for such a course in the present temper of the people of Canada would certainly defeat their object, but the course they are pursuing shows where their affections lie. For it is impossible, were Canada connected by the close bond of material interest with the United States, to the exclusions of the British manufacturer could endure, and that tie being snapped she would have little object in maintaining, if

It cannot be denied that Mr. Smith makes out a kind of case. The geographical figure of the Dominion; the barriers of wild country, desert of mountain ranges which separate Ontario and Quebec from the Maritime Provinces, and Canada "proper" from Manitoba, and Manitoba from British Columbia, and the natural commercial connection which the Maritime Provinces have with New England States, Quebec and Ontario with the States south of them, Manitoba with Minnesota, and British Columbia with California appear, on the principles that material interests are controlling and traffic always takes the most convenient routes, to point to a commercial union between Canada and the United States as the most natural and advantageous thing possible.

All Canadians have not the same hatred of English aristocratic influence, the same consame little love for British connection, with which Mr. Smith seems embued, or the same single eye for their material interests which seems to possess those who are agitating in Montreal and other centres of business for a commercial union. The great majority of the people of Canada are still strongly British in their ideas, and are not, by any means, inclined to abandon their position of independently governed young nation and Icyal dependence on a Grand Mother country, though it may foster some extravagant, old country court habits, and cause their gov-

If the United States, which as "the greater and stronger New Dress Trimmings of "the smaller and weaker nation," would be arrived at. Mr. Smith makes the suggestion, and in doing so, acts like a peace maker. Though we all very well know, he is no friend to Canadian independence, we will forgive him if he helps us to a better understanding with our neighbours.

The Three Commissions. The members of the Dominion Govern ment met lately in Ontario for the transaction of business, previous to dispersing for Sunshades, Gloves, Hosiery, &c the Summer. Ministers of State must have their holidays like common folks, and they enjoy the cool salt breezes of the sea coast, out, or the delight of lying on the sward beneath the shade of the green wood tree doing nothing, or devouring the last sensation novel, as well as those whose minds have Cottons, Tickings novel, as well as these whose minus have never been occupied by high affairs. The chief result of the ministerial deliberations, was the appointment of three Commissions on the Pacific Railway, Civil Service, and International Park. The referring of a appointing the three Commissions. With re-B. Plumb, M. P., and Mr. H. Desjardins, M. is thought, would be raised, as to the amenderrand to New York. Perhaps he would die happy, if one of the government organs hopes and declares it will, it has little reason for its excontinent of North America, and was assured istence. The Commission is empowered to "Deas ex machina" who had brought about the trouble (and expense, we suppose,) the Union, between the Dominion and the bringing gentlemen connected with banking Republic. The Ottawa Citizen, edited by Mayor Macintosh, thereon remarks-" In this proposition we cordially Hincks, that there is a band of agitators in Join, and we join it the more cordially since we do not understand that the commissio is expected or intended to provide any radical change in the system at present existing." If the commission intends to do nothing more serious than to listen to testimony it will be nothing better than a solemn sham, and the members will have a dull time, as sit ting in Ottawa, they will not have like members of the other commissions, a pleasant trip abroad at the country's expense. The Pacific Railway Commission has been appointed to investigate in all matters relating to the surveys, contracts, engineering and expenditures of that undertaking, which will be published for the general satisfaction and laid before Parliament next session. The members of it are Judge Clark of Coburg, who will, the Mail says, " provide for the legal regularity of proceedings and evidence," and who is, according to the Globe, " decided Tory, and one of the sharpest, shrewdest, most dexterous men on the Bench!" Mr. Samuel Keefer, whose experience as an engineer, the Mail says, "will be a guarantee of the technical fairness of the investigation," and who the Globe says is "eminent as an enquirer into matters which require ingenious treatment;" and Mr. Miall of the Ir land Revenue Department, who, according to the Mail, stands high in the confidence of all parties as a master of accounts and finance but who is dubbed by the Globe "a government servant." The Mail is very confident of the good intentions of the government in appointing the Commission, and hopeful that good results will come from its labors. The Globe hints that the government appointed i after long hesitation, being constrained to d so, owing to distrust among their friends, and to a quarrel between Sir Charles Tupper and Hon. Mr. Pope over the letting of the contracts of Sections A and B, and it expects no good to come out of the investigation, which the government has instituted into its own conduct, of course. Mr. Gladstone since he has come int power has been subject to many vexations He needs must feel keenly the triumph of having hunted down Earl Beaconsfield, and turned the liberal minority into a great majority, to console him for the humiliations, rebuffs opposition, and general worriment he has had to endure. He is too old, it is feared, to sustain long so much of the burden of government as he has undertaken-the functions of the First Lord of the Treasury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer-and his friends feel anxious, remembering how seventeen years ago, his health broke down, in an alarming manner, under the pressure put on him. Affairs have, generally, taken an unpleasant turn for him since he has come into power. He was compelled to make amends to the Emperor of Austria, for impulsive remarks he made during the heat of the election, and to commence his government by apologising, and lowering, in the estimation of many, the dignity of the Empire in the face of Europe Not to particularly mention the annoyance he has been subjected to by the extraordinary scenes enacted in the Commons in the debates over the motion whether Bradlaugh the atheistic member of Northampton, should be, after declining to take the members oath, allowed to affirm and take his seat, and by the endeavour of Mr. O'Denne!l, the Home Rule member, to force on the House an inby making a friendly advance, would propose quiry into the antecedents of M. Kingston Military College, It seems impossible to make a military nation of Canada. Its position as a dependency in an Empire, and in close proximity to a powerful republic is against it. An attempt has been made to create a standing army, but Major General Sir Selby Smythe has been unable to accomplish the object of his desire. He has left the country, and even the most enthusiastic military minded men in the Dominion are relieved by his departure. Still, in justice to the departed General, it must be said that if he has not army, he has left the volunteer militia in an efficient state, proof of which was given by the most creditable display made at the Quebec Review, which elicited so very warm and confident an enconium from the Governor General. And the genius of the people s against Canada becoming a military nation. The majority of them cannot see the necessity or use of their young men wearing red coats, and drilling for a few days every year, and consider the money spent in maintaining an expensive militia staff as thrown away. They are wrong of course, as the volunteer force is of service to the country, and could not altogether be dispensed with. But nothing but a grave crisis—the threatening of war between Great Britain and the United States-will arouse the mass of the eople to take a serious view of the military position of the country, and no fears are really entertained that any such crisis will chakoffs, Beusts, et ad omne genus, with all

The annual outlay is about $50,000. About eighty cadets receive an education, and of all who have graduated since its establishment, only four will receive a commission in the British army. Why should Canada spend $50,000 a year, that a few of Mail inquires. The Commandant of the College, Col. Hewett, feeling, no doubt, that the country receives no benefit, at all in proed that the graduates should receive appointments in the departments of Public Works and Railways. But why should the country be called on to pay for the education of any of its employees? No satisfactory answer being possible to either question, the Mail has uttered the fiat, "collegium est delendum" the college must be swept away. As the Mail has the confidence of the government, and speaks, it may be pressumed with knowledge of their intentions, it is probable that its days are numbered. The Mail, we fancy will be more successful in its attack on the Kingston institution, than its great rival the
