BARRIERS BURNED AWAY.

BY THE REV. EDWARD P. ROWE.

CHAPTER XVI.

SHE SPEAKS TO HIM.

After the plan for the rearrangement of the store had been determined upon, Miss Ludolph commenced studying its topography. She went regularly through the building examining closely every part and space, sometimes sketching a few outlines in a little gilt book. It would seem that she was seeking by her taste to make the show rooms pictures in themselves, wherein each part should blend harmoniously, and create one beautiful effect. Dennis saw what was coming. The carrying out the plan he had heard discussed, and he wished with intense longing that he might be her assistant. But she would as soon have thought of sending for Pat Murphy. She intended to select one of the older clerks to aid her. Still Dennis hoped that by some strange and happy turn of fortune, part of this work might fall to him.

Every spare moment of early morning and evening he spent in sketching and studying, but he sadly felt the need of instruction and money to buy materials. He was merely groping his way as best he might, and he felt that Miss Ludolph could teach him so much if she would only condescend to the task. He was willing to be a very humble learner at first. If in some way he could only make known his willingness to pick up the crumbs of knowledge that she might be willing out of kindness to scatter in his way, he might expect something from ordinary good nature.

But a week or two passed without his receiving so much as a glance from those cold blue eyes that rested so critically on all that passed before them; and on an unlucky day in March all hope of any help from her, vanished.

Under the influence of Spring the streets were again becoming muddy and wet, and his duty as boot-black increased daily. He had arranged to perform this menial task in a remote corner of the the store, as much out of sight as possible. The duty had become still more disagreeable since the young lady haunted the place, for he feared she would learn to associate him only with the dust and blackening brush.

Just behind where he usually stood, a good picture had been hung, under Mr. Schwartz's system, simply because it accurately fitted the space. It was in wretched light, and could never be seen or appreciated there. Miss Ludolph in her investigations and planning discovered this at a time most unfortunate for poor Dennis. Whilst polishing away one morning on the huge jumble of leather that inclosed Mr. Schwartz's broad under standing, he suddenly became conscious that she was approaching. It seemed that she was looking directly at him, and was about to speak. His heart thumped like a trip-hammer, his cheeks burned, and blur came over his eyes, for he was divident in ladies' presence. Therefore he stood before her the picture of confusion, with the big boot poised in one hand, and the polishing brush in the other. With the instincts of a gentleman, however, he made an awkward bow, feeling, though, that under the circumstances, his politeness could only appear ridiculous. And he was right. It was evident from the young lady's face, that her keen perception of the ridiculous was thoroughly aroused. But for the sake of her own dignity (she cared not a jot for him.) she bit her lip to control her desire to laugh in his face, and said rather sharply—

'Will you stand out of my way?'

She hnd spoken do him.

He was so mortified and confused that in his effort to obey, he partially fell over a bronze sheep, designed to ornament some pastoral scene, and the heel of Mr. Schwart's heavy boot came down with a thump that made everything ring. There was a titter from some of the clerks. Mr. Ludolph, who was following his daughter, exclaimed,

'What's the matter, Fleet? You seem rather unsteady this morning, for a church member.'

For a moment he had the general appearance usually ascribed to his unlucky stumbling-block. But by a strong effort he recovered himself. Deigning no reply, he set his teeth, compressed his lips, picked up the boot, and polished away as before, trying to look and feel regardless of all the world. In fact he looked as proud as she ever had. But for the time not noticing him, she said to her father—

'Here is a specimen. Look where this picture is hung. In boot black corner I should term it. It would not sell here in a thousand years, for what light there is would be obscured much of the time by somebody's big boots and the artist in charge. It has evidently been placed here in view of one principle alone—dimension; its length and breadth according with the space in the corner. You will see what a change I will bring about in a month or two, after my plans are matured,' and then strolled to another part of the store. But before leaving, Miss Ludolph happened to glance at Dennis's face, and was much struck by its expression. Surely Pat Murphy never would or could look like that. For the first time the thought entered her mind that Dennis might be of a different clay and character from Pat. But the next moment his expression of pride and offended dignity in such close juxtaposition to the big boot he was twirling almost savagely around, again appealed to her sense of the ludicrous, and she turned away with a broad smile. Dennis, looking up, saw the smile and guessed the cause; and when, a moment after, Mr. Schwartz appeared, asking in his loud, blunt way,

'My boots ready?'

He felt like flinging both at his head, and leaving the store forever. Handing them to him without a word, he hastened up stairs, for he felt that he must be alone.

At first his impulse was strong to rebel, to assert that by birth and education he was a gentleman, and must be treated as such, or he would go elsewhere. But as the tumult in his mind calmed, the case became as clear to him as a sum in addition. He had voluntarily taken Pat Murphy's place, and why should he complain at Pat's treatment. He had pledged his word that there should be no trouble from his being above his business, and he resolved to keep his word till Providence gave him better work to do. Then he remembered that the hands of his Divine Lord and Master had done as humble work as his, and was ashamed of his pride. He bathed his hot face in cool water, breathed a brief prayer for strength and patience, and went back to his tasks strong and calm.

CHAPTER XVII.

PROMOTED.

Late in the afternoon of the same day (which was Saturday), as Mr. Ludolph was passing out of the store on his way home, he noticed the table that he had arranged artistically some little time before, as a lesson to his clerks. Gradually it had fallen back into its old straight lines and rigid appearance. He seemed greatly annoyed.

'What is the use of re-arranging the store,' he muttered. 'They will have it all back again on the general principle of a ramrod, in a little while. But we have put our hands to this work, and it shall be carried through even if I discharge half of these wooden-heads.'

Then calling the clerk in charge, he said—

'Look here, Mr. Berder, I grouped the articles on this counter for you once, did I not?'

'Yer sir!'

'Let me find them Monday morning just as I arranged them on that occasion.'

The young man looked as blank and dismayed as if he had been ordered to swallow them all before Monday morning

He went to work and jumbled them up as if that was grouping them, and then asked one or two of the other clerks what they thought of it. They shook their heads, and said it looked worse than before.

'I vill study over him all day to-morrow, and den vill come early Monday and fix him,' and the perplexed youth took himself off.

Dennis felt almost sure that he could arrange it as Mr. Ludolph had, or with something of the same effect, but did not like to offer his services, not knowing how they would be received, for Mr. Berder had taken special delight in snubbing him.

After the duties of the store were over, Dennis wrote to his mother a warm, bright, filial letter, portraying the scene of the day in its comic light, making all manner of fun of himself, that he might hide the fact that he had suffered. But he did not hide it, as a return letter proved, for it was full of sympathy and indignation that her son should be so treated, but also full of praise for his Christian manliness and patience.

'And now, my son,' she wrote, 'let me tell you of at least two results of your steady, faithful performance of your present humble duties. The money you send so regularly is more than sufficient for our simple wants. We have every comfort, and I am laying something by for sickness and trouble, for both are pretty sure to come before long in this world. In the second place you have given me that which is far better than money—comfort and strength. I feel more and more that we can lean upon you as our earthly support, and not find you a 'broken reed.' While so many sons are breaking their mother's hearts, you are filling mine with hope and joy. I am no prophetess, my son, but from the sure word of God I predict for you much happiness and prosperity for thus cheering and providing for your widowed mother. Mark my words. God has tried you and not found you wanting. He will soon give you better work to do—work more in keeping with your character and ability.'

This prediction was fulfilled before Dennis received the letter containing it, and it happened on this wise.

Early Monday morning Mr. Berder appeared and attempted the hopeless task of grouping the articles on his table, in accordance with Mr. Ludolph's orders. After an hour's work he exclaimed in despair,—

'I cannot do him to save my life.'

Dennis sta distance, with half amused, half pitying face had watched Mr. Berder's wonderful combinations, and when Rip Van Winkle was placed between two togaed Roman Senators, and Ichabod Crane arranged as if making love to a Greek Goddess, he came near laughing outright. But when Mr Berder spoke, he approached and said kindly and respectfully—

'Will you let me try to help you?'

'Yes;' said Mr. Berder, 'you cannot make things vorse.'

Acting upon this ungracious permission Dennis folded his arms and studied the table for five minutes.

'Come,' said Mr. Berder, 'standing dare and looking so vise as an owl, von't help matters. Mr. Ludolph will be here soon.'

'I am not losing time,' said Dennis, and a moment proved he was not, for having formed a general plan for its arrangement, he went rapidly to work, and in a quarter of an hour, could challenge Mr. Ludolph or any other critic to find serious fault.

'There! I could do better if I had more time, but I must go to my sweeping and dusting, or Mr. Schwartz will be down on me, and he is pretty heavy, you know. I never saw such a man,—he can see a grain of dust half across the store.'

Mr Berder had looked at Dennis's quick skillful motions in blank amazement, and then broke out into unwonted panegyric for him,

'I say, Vleet, dat's capital! Where you learn him?' Then in a paroxysm of generosity he added,

'Dar's a quarter for you.'

'No I thank you,' said Dennis, 'I did not do it for money.'

'Vat did the fool do it for, den. I'd like to know,' muttered Mr Berder, the philosophy of his life resuming its former control. 'Saved a quarter, anyhow, and vat's more, know vare to go next time de old man comes down on me.'

A little after nine Mr. and Miss Ludolph came in, and paused at the table. Dennis, unnoticed, stood behind Benjamin Franklin and Joan of Arc, placed lovingly together on another counter, face to face, as if in mutual admiration, and from his hiding place watched the scene before him with intense anxiety. One thought only filled his mind—would they approve or condem his taste, for he had arranged the table on a plan of his own. His heart leaped up within him when Mr. Dudolph said—

'Why, Berder, this is excellent. To be sure you have taken your own method, and followed your own taste, but I find no fault with that, when you produce an effect like this.'

'I declare, father, chimed in Miss Ludolph, 'this table pleases me greatly. It is a little oasis in this great desert of a store. Mr. Berder, I compliment you on your taste. You shall help me re-arrange artistically, everything in the building.'

Dennis in his agitation, came near precipating Benjamin Franklin into the arms of Joan of Arc, a position scarcely in keeping with either character.

'Yes, Christine, that is true,' continued Mr. Ludolph, 'Mr. Berder will be just the one to help you, and I am glad you have found one competent. By all the furies! just compare this table with the one next to it, where the Past, Present, and Future have not the slightest regard for each other, and satyrs and angels, philosophers and bandits are mixed up about as closely as in real life. Here, Berder, try you hand at this counter also; and you, young men, gather round and see what a difference, when art instead of mathematic rules the world of Art. If this thing goes on, we shall have the golden age back again in the store.'

Mr. Berder, though somewhat confused had received all his compliments with bows and smiles. But Dennis, the moment the thrill of joy was over that he had pleased Mr. and Miss Ludolph's fastidious taste, felt himself reddening with honest indignation that Mr. Berder should carry off all his laurels before his face. But he resolved to say nothing, knowing that time would right him. When Mr. Ludolph asked the young men to step forward, he came with the others.

'That's right, Fleet,' said Mr. Ludolph, again, 'you can get a useful hint, too, like enough.'

'Nonsense, father,' said Miss Ludolph, in a tone not so low but that Dennis heard it, 'why spoil a good sweeper and duster by puttiug uppish notions in his head. He keeps the store cleaner than any man you ever had, and I don't soil my dresses as I used to.'

Dennis's color heightened a little, and his lips grew firmer together, but he gave no other sign that he heard this limitation of his hope and ambition. But it cut him rather deep. The best he could ever do, then, in her view, was to keep her dresses from being soiled.

In the meantime Mr. Berder had shown great embarrassment at Mr. Ludolph's unexpected request. After a few moments of awkward hesitation he stammered out that he could do it better alone. The suspicion of keen Mr. Ludolph was at once aroused, and he persisted—

'O come, Mr. Berder, we don't expect you to do your best in a moment, but a person of your taste can certainly make a great change for the berter in the table before you.'

In sheer desperation the entrapped youth attempted the task, but he had not bungled five minutes before Mr. Ludolph said sharply,

'Mr. Berder, you did not arrange this table.'

'Vell,' whined Mr. Berder, 'I didn't say dat I did.'

'You caused us to believe that you did,' said Mr. Ludolph, his brow growing dark. 'Now, one question, and I wish the truth: Who did arrange lhis table?'

'Vleet, dare, helped me,' gasped Mr. Berder.

'Helped, you? Mr. Fleet, step forward, if you please, for I intend to have the truth of this matter. How much help did Mr. Berder give you in arranging this table?'

'None, sir,' said Dennis, looking straight into Mr. Ludolph's eyes.

All looked with great surprise at Dennis, especially Miss Ludolph, who regarded him most curiously. How different he appears from Pat Murphy, she again thought.

'Some one has told a lie, now,' said Mr. Ludolph sternly. 'Mr. Fleet, I shall put you to the same test that Berder failed in. Arrange that counter sufficiently well to prove that it was your hands that arranged this.'

Dennis stepped forward promptly, but with a pale face and compressed lips. Feeling that both honor and success were at stake, he grouped and combined everything as before, as far as the articles would permit, having no time to originate a new plan. As he worked, the clerks gazed in open astonishment, Mr. Ludolph looked significantly at his daughter, while she watched him with something of the same wonder which we have when one of the lower animals show human sagacity and skill.

Mr. Ludolph was Napoleonic in other respects than his ambition and selfishness. He was shrewd enough to 'promote on the field for meritorious services.' Therefore, as Dennis's task approached completion, he said—

'That will do, Mr. Fleet, you can finish the work at your leisure. Mr. Berder, you are discharged from this day for deception. I would have borne with your incompetency if you had been truthful But I never trust any one who has deceived me once,' he said so sternly that even Christine's cheek paled. 'Mr. Schwartz will settle with you, and let me never see or hear from you again. Mr. Fleet, I promote you to Mr. Berder's counter and pay.

Thus this man of the world, without a thought of pity, mercy, or kindly feeling in either case, gave one of his clerk's a new impetus towards the devil, and another an important lift up to better things and then went his way, congratulating himself that all things had worked together for his good, that morning, though where he would find another Dennis Fleet to fill Pat's place, now vacant again, he did not know.

But Miss Ludolph looked at Dennis somewhat kindly, and with a little honest admiration in her face He was so different from what she had supposed him to be as a matter of course, and had just done in a quiet manly way a thing most pleasing to her, so she said with a smile that seemed perfectly heavenly to him,—

'You are above blacking boots, sir,' and then thinking that a cat at his discomfited rival would gratify him, she turned to Mr. Berder and said, 'and you, sir, it seems, are fit for nothing else.'

She would have known her mistake if she had heard Dennis's soliloquy when left to himself, 'How could she hit him when he was down.'
