That better men have rooms ore It never pays to foster pride; And squander wealth in show ; For friends thus won are sure to run In times of want or woe. The noble worth Are gems of heart and brain zol.

A conscience clear, one sug A household dear, And hands without a stain.

It never pays to hate a foe Or cater to a friend, To fawn and whine, much less repine, To borrow or to lend. The faults of men Are fewer when Each rows his own canoe, For friends and debts,

And pampered pets Unbounded mischief brew. It never pays to wreck the health In drudging after gain, And he is sold who thinks that gold Is cheaply bought with pain. A humble lot,

A cosy cot, Have tempted even kings For station high That wealth will buy Nought of contentment brings.

It never pays! A blunt refrain, Well worthy of a song; For age and youth must learn this truth That nothing pays that's wrong. The good and pure Alone are sure To bring prolonged success While what is right In heaven's sight

SHAVED BY A MADMAN.

"Why don't you go to a barber to get shaved?" I asked of my friend, Tour Burney, as I sat one day in his bachelor lodgings watching his convulsive efforts with a razor clutched between the thumb and only two remaining fingers of his left hand, a part of which and the whole of the right arm had been lost during the war-" why don't you go to a barber?" "Wait till I get through with this scrape and I'll tell you," he replied, "and mean-

Tom and I had served together in the army; in fact, were old chuns, and so, lighting a fragrant Havana, 4 settled my self down comfortably on the sofa and watched his grimaces as they were reflected in the large mirror in front of which he was standing, meanwhile keeping up a running conversation on divers topics.

At the end of nearly half an hour, he had succeeded in removing the greater portion of his beard, together with more or less of the epidermis from which it sprouted, and after bathing his face, donning his smoking jacket and setting his pipe a going, put himself to rights in a large easy chair, and began: "Why don't I go to a barber? Well, I'll tell you. I came very near going once too often. That's why.
