In the pathway there a white rose lies. But. in spite of its beauty, it slowly dies-Who placed it there? Was it thrown by some idle hand in glee, Or thrown in a throb of agony? Did it fall just there not even missed, Or was it clasped and passion kissed Ere lost-Thy hidden secrets, fair white rose,

Who knows? In the gardon there a sweet bird sings A matin song, The sunlight rests on its golden wings-Will it tarry long? Nay, look, 'tis soaring from our view Into those far off depths of blue; One moment 'twas with us. The next it went With its chosen banishment:

Whence it came or whither it goes, Who knows? How like is our life to a fragile flower That dies in a day To a bird that sings for a fleeting hour, Then hastens away But we know that no flower or bird can fall . Unknown to Him who loves us all: And whether our lives be short or long, Whether they pass in sorrow or song; The purpose of every moment that goes, Who knows?

And the looks of the men showed that muddy road from South Gap, and a good half dozen miles from the stage. He had out their threat. And now Jack Crampton's quickness of thought stood him in rare good stead. Nonchalantly blowing the smoke from his lips he answered:

"Why, certainly, send for Doc, by all a low, ominous-looking building, he had given up all hopes of reaching Beechtown gotten my face—in fact, I'm quite sure he gotten my face—in fact, I'm q white metal, and various tools, the use of which Jack did not know. But there was no mistaking the heaps of coin which were piled up on one end of the table, and which two of the men were assorting and rolling up into packages. The house and the surroundings seemed strangely in keeping with the industry there followed. And that industry was counterfeiting! This truth had not more than fully dawned upon Jack Crampton's mind—he had no tyet removed his eye from the chink—when he felt a hand fall roughly on his shoulder, and heard a voice close of the table, so that the messenger for Doc can deliver it without any extra trouble. It's a matter of business—a friend day he entertains a tender feeling towards the ray of light, and to peer through the crevice. The sight that met his gaze was far from re-assuring. In the small, low room there were four or five men, busily engaged in a work the nature of which, although at first a little doubtful, soon became too apparent. In a corner was a small forge, with bellows, which one of the men was blowing. On a work-table in the centre were moulds and bars of whith Jack did not know. But there was so that the messenger for Doc can deliver trace. They were to hand over the transfer deeds at the hour I have named, and if I must break the engagement I will at least ask permission to send a word of explanation to my friend.
