In conscious might it steams along: With graceful lines and powerful frame, It proudly bears its living throng. To distant lands it ploughs its way, And to the many wealth doth bring, Its tidings from the absent friends Are welcome as the smiling spring. You see it cleave the restless wave, And know old ocean's space 'twill span;

But, cast o'er all, can you behold

The shadow of the working man,

See, on the locomotive rush With headlong speed o'er iron road, Like living, breathing monster, whom Some unseen powers onward goad, Through cities, towns, and shady dells, O'er gurgling streams and woodland glades. It speeds you on with clang and roar;

Ay, 'neath mountains gloomy shades, With case it quickly bears along Pilgrims of every tribe and clan But o'er each fleeting view dost see The shadow of the working man?

Come, gaze upon this mighty pile. The spire of which in cloudland dwells: Kissed by the sinking sun's last 1ay, As gently chime the distant bells Come view its grandly massive walls, Its pillars, halls, and arches true Which are so neatly, deftly wrought, Without one flaw to meet the view. O'er all this blended strength and grace, As round it zephyrs gently fan, Can you not see, in outline bold, The shadow of the workingman? Go seek the lofty mountain height,

And there behold the glowing scene-The forest, field and waving grain. The rippling lakes, the meadows green : Each beauty of the prospect view, All thronged with busy, useful life, Where once the gloomy wilds were seen Where savage revels once were rife. Go, look upon all earth's broad face, Replete with art and nature's plan : And there, in bold relief you'll see The shadow of the workingman.

Ellen Churchill had come to the great factory two years previous to the date of was released and sent to his father's the indignation meeting in the anteroom, and had risen to the position of forewoman in one of the loom rooms. She was a handsome girl of about 20 when she applied for work, and by every action and word betrayed the fact that she had stepped from a life of refinement to the hard work of a factory hand. Her low, even tone betrayed the lady in its well chosen words, and her slim, white hands bore no trace of toil upon their smooth skin. She was courteous to all who came into intercourse with her, but intimate with none. She had nnrsed Susy Whiting through a long period of Susy Whiting through a long period of the state of the house and take even a few dollars to subscribe for a superiod of the last instalment being acknowledged in a letter I handed to her yesterday. It was well known that the salary of Ellen Churchill was sufficient to warrant a good style of living and dressing. In the great board ing house, where seventy of the girls had rooms, she could well afford to pay for the cooked the cheapest food. sent the insult to his father.' There was an exultation in the tone of the last remark but ill-concealed. Walter med with soft lace ruffles at throat and Rodman, the only child of the old manager, was in the counting house of the factory, with every prospect of soon becoming a partner. A man past 30, he had risen in the employ of Meredith & Son from a lad of 14, and had saved money from a handsome salary, with the avowed intention of purchasing a place in the firm upon the anticipated retirement of old Mr. Meredith, who was known to favor the intention. Among all the clerks and workmen in the great factory there was no one so handsome as Walter Rodman, none so quietly refined in manner, none so great a favorite with all. But he had gone through thirty years of life fancy free, until Ellen Churchill came to the factory. There was something in the noble, refined face of the young girl that attracted Walter Rodman from the first. There was some heavy trouble brooding in the sadness of her great dark eyes he never doubted; but if ever purity and goodness were pictured in human countenace, they ence, Sexual Debility, cured by "Wells' were in Ellen's. Upon the graceful figure was a dress of fleecy muslin, tastefully made and trimwrist, and a few well chosen ornaments. Suddenly some inner sense seemed to tell Ellen she was watched. She turned and saw Walter Rodman looking earnestly, wistfully at her. A quick flush swept across her cheek and her eyes lighted gladly as she came forward to greet him. "May I come in?" he asked, opening the little gate.

"I am very glad to welcome you," she answered, and then extended her hand as he sprang lightly up the steps. It is not fair to repeat lover's talk. Suffice it that before Walter left the little cottage to take the return train, he had won the dearest wish of his heart; and when summer roses bloomed Ellen became the bride of the junior partner of Meredith & Co., the new firm of the factory where she had worked so faithfully.
