At length-to the Fountain of Tears. Very peaceful the place is, and solely For piteous lamenting and sighing, From those who come living or dying. Alike from their hopes and their fears. Full of cypress-like shadows the place is, And statues that cover their faces, But out of the gloom springs the holy And beautiful Fountain of Tea:s.

And it flows, and it flows with a motion So gentle, and lovely and listless, And murmurs a tune so resistless To him who hath suffered and hears. You shall surely without a word spoken, Kneel down there and know your heart

And yield to the long curbed emotion, That day by the Fountain of Tears.

"FORWARD BLACK WATCH."

GRANDFATHER'S STORY.

The forty-second, or "Black Watch," the regiment to which I had the honor to belong, passed through—during the Peninsular war—all the vicissitudes attendant upon the life of a soldier; but no where did it display itself to better advantage than during the days of the distressing retreat from Astroga to Corun-Brave, high of hope, and light of heart were the bosoms which beat beneath the tartan when the British host under Lieutenant General Sir John Moore advanced goal, for ere we had advanced many yards with the Spanish General Romana; and not less brave, if heavy and despairing, were those same hearts where these same hearts with the bear skin caps of the French grenafrom Liston to Douro to form a junction were those same hearts, when, after the dispersion of the native armies, they turned their facvs resolutely eastward and began that ever memorable retreat. Desolation sat upon the mountains; heavy

But appeals of this kind had become common enough by this time, and Geordie only shook his head mournfully and passed on. You may think this a heartless action, because your ideas of war are at variance with the bare reality; but to my mind that mournful shake of the head told of the young hero from Elgin, who laid down the tumultuous, unspeakable feeling surging through the poor fellow's soul.

Alas! Alas! War in all its phases is barbarous and amount of the fleat told of his life for his friend.

I also had until then passed on, shut-ting my ears against the piteous cries, turning my eyes away from the outstretched hands; but the despairing look of poor Allan Stronach went to the depth of my heart, and being still comparatively steady on my legs, I lifted him up, and with some assistance placed him on my back, and in this way managed to carry him for a mile or two. When I set him down again he seemed to have recovered wonderfully, and with
