With that strange and wonderful splendor That is fleeting as a dream;
I thought that the hands of the angels Had flung open heaven's gateway wide. And I caught a glimpse of the glory From the hills on the other side.

Is it not a beautiful fancy, This sunset thought of mine, That the gates of heaven are always Flung open at a day's decline ; That those whose day is ended, Of earthly woes and ills. May pass to the morning sunshine

That dwells on the heavenly hills? When for me the sunset gateway Shall at day's decline unclose, And I pass in through the portals To that long and sweet repose, I know that I shall remember, In that city so fair and far, My strange and beautiful fancy

Of the sunset gates ajar. Perhaps while I sat there dreaming Of the gateway in the west, Some poor soul went through its portals To a long and endless rest-Passed through the sunset gateway To that "city paved with gold" Passed into the new life's gladness,

WHAT THE TRAIN BROUGHT

express train rushed across the bridge that spanned the narrow river on the Derwent farm, near Concord, and Alice Derwent, the farmer's pretty, dark-eyed daughter, stood on the vine-shaded porch, looking after it with an unconscious sigh. "So many come by you, so many go by you, out into the great, wide, beautiful world," she thought, as she gazed over the fertile valley farm and out through the break in the circling blue mountains, from whence a trail of white smoke came was the living, breathing image of his sire.

"Supper ready, mother?" called out Alice?"

"To be sure it is," replied his bustling little wife, who had just such eyes and hair as horner Alice and inches and daughter. hair as bonny Alice, and just the same sweet smile. "Isn't it always ready, father, when the train goes by? Come Alice !" "Alice is out there looking for her for tune, mother," said Tom. "It's coming by that train. I know all about it."

Alice smiled and shook her head at her saucy brother, as she took her seat at her

Mrs. Derwent poured out the tea—hot, strong and fragrant.

About him.

"Nothing mean or hoggish about me, Jane; bet your bangs on that. Found a mine up in Wood River, and named it Jane, after you."

"What are you giving me, dear George? What do you take me for?"

"Fact, Jane; named it after you."

"How jealous that'll make the other girls in the city? Won't their bangs curl strong and fragrant.

"Squire Seaton, up in the big house yonder, don't often get such tea as this, with all his staff of servants," said Tom looking across the valley to the brick and freestone palace of the one millionaire of "Poor man!" sighed Mrs. Derwent, "I do pity him! His wife and daughter dead, and his only son so wild and willful and a wanderer all over the world. Only last week he told me with tears in his eyes that he had heard of his boy, and that he had been lately seen in Leadville, intoxicated and poorly dressed in a gambling saloon. Yet, when he wrote there to him—and wrote kindly—he disappeared. If it was our Tom, Elihu, it would break my heart. Tom, if you ever do grow unsteady and run away like Philip Steaton, you will give your mother her death-blow. Remember that," "Thank God, it isn't Tom. Martha,

And then Squire Seaton came feebly but swiftly into the room, and he held his son to his heart, sobbing aloud with gratitude and joy, while Alice called her bewildered mother into the kitchen and told her of her expedition to the house told her of her expedition to the house of the lonely millionaire.

Joy seldom kills; and there is a reviving power in love and happiness combined far beyond the skill of all earthly physicians or the virtue of all earthly drugs.

So it happened that as the spring months deepened into the summer Philip Steaton, well and strong once more, stood beside bonny Alice in the porch one evening to see the 6 o'clock express flash by.
