The gathering of winter cabbage, turnips, beets, and carrots, and the Basket Vegetables-T. Watt 1st. storing of the same in pits, is usually done in this latitude about the first of November. However, the state of the weather is to be our guide. Roots and cabbages are benefitted in vitality and keeping qualities by romaining in their growing position until the approach of severe weather. Thousands of tons of roots and cabbage perish in pits and cellars in this country annually; not from the extremes of cold, but from the extremes of heat. Fermentation commences rapidly when the gaseous fluids from the newly-pitted roots cannot escape, and those that are not reduced by decay are injured in vitality. This can be avoided by covering; the pits only lightly at the beginning-a few inches of earth or other covering; Charlotte Co. Agricultural Show. enough only to keep the frost out.

It is literally true that the time to make hay is while the sun shines, for he simple reason that sunshine is necessary for the drying process. It is equaly true that the time to fit stock for winter is while we have, without artificial protection, congenial temperature, combined with such varieties in food as the growing season gives us. By supplement this with grains, meal, oil cake, and the like, we are in the most rapid manner enabled to put flesh on our cattle and other stock preparatory to winter. The conditions favorable for gain will soon disappear, and it is the poorest kind of policy to delay the giving of grain or ground feed till the stock are finally placed in their stalls for the winter. At any rate, individual animals that have up to this time remained thin, should be selected out, whether cattle, horses, or pigs, and fed extra allowances of the very This, without any reference to marketing or mere appearance sake, but simply for the same reason that hay making is attended to while the conditions are right for it, for the gain of a beast ends when winter is estabished; at least under the conditions with which they are generally surrounded. It is well understood that stock will gain more rapidly on a variety of food than when confined to meagre assortment, and such are in thin condition should have the special attention of the feeder during the com-
