Lake Superior Section.

The journals of the Upper Provinces, on both sides, are excited over a report that the P. R. Syndicate contemplate the abandonment of the difficult and expensive line north of Lake Superior.

"Did not we tell you," they say to the pensive public, "that the Syndicate would shirk building that part of the road?"

"Wasn't the contract so framed as to tempt them to do it?" "Why did not the contract give enormous subsidies for building the cheap prairie sections, and secure them to the Syndicate independently of their carrying out the enormously expensive section around Lake Superior, for which the subsidies are consequently likely to prove a paying undertaking, were resting in confidence that the line would be pushed through with all energy, until completion. The Grit papers that look upon the members of the Syndicate as a body of selfish, astute, money grabbing men, who will evade the carrying out of the contract if they see that it is to their own profit to do so, gave ready belief to the report.

"The interests of the Syndicate are involved in getting around the Lake as fast as possible; and we have no doubt whatever that they will perform their undertaking, as we have no doubt that they will hold officially to the terms of whatever engagement they have made."

The Liberal-Conservative Montreal Gazette was inclined to take the report seriously, and thought it stated that the Government having control of the subsidies could insure the carrying out of the contract, yet it betrayed some trepidation, and a disposition to go down on its knees to beseech the Syndicate, as honorable men, not to shirk the work.

The Montreal Gazette is very confident that there is nothing in the report. "The interests of the Syndicate are involved in getting around the Lake as fast as possible; and we have no doubt whatever that they will perform their undertaking, as we have no doubt that they will hold officially to the terms of whatever engagement they have made."

The Crops.

From all we can learn of the state of the crops throughout the Province, we conclude that the prospect is very promising.

The spring was very late, cold and wet; so much so, that many feared they would not be able to put seed in the ground in time to have any chance of a return.

While many were becoming discouraged the weather changed. It has continued some; sometimes too much rain, but on the whole, very favorable—a marvelous change in the anticipations of the farmer has thereby been brought about.

To particularize, we would put the hay crop down as very fair, perhaps on the whole at about the average; were it not for the loss of the clover it would have been very heavy.

A Carleton Man meets his Death from an Unknown Hand.

On Saturday night, at Carleton, St. John, a young man named James Campbell was found murdered on the street by some member of a gang of rowdies with whom he was associated.

The identity of the murderer or murderers is shrouded in mystery, notwithstanding that fully twenty-five persons must have seen the fatal blow struck. John McCaslin, John Power, John Bates, John Pratt, Samuel Whites, and Geo. Godwin were arrested, as having taken part in the row, the close of which resulted in Campbell's violent death.

The story of the events which led to the murder is thus told by the Telegraph:— Shortly before 10 o'clock he was seen by his sister Kate, sitting on a pair of steps only a short distance from his home. There had been some quarrelling between some other parties in whose company he was, and he was advised by her to come home and leave the company. In answer to her entreaties, he told her that it was too early to go home and that he wanted to see his friend McCaslin home first, and would then come back. He left her then and walked up the street in the direction of the Queen Square.

The next seen of James was at his home when he was brought into the house, about 11 o'clock by some of the young men who had been with him in the street. He was found lying on the ground, his head and in a dying condition. Dr. Musgrave was sent for without delay and arrived about 12 o'clock. He at once made an examination of the body, and found that the fatal blow was broken, and although the fact could not be definitely ascertained, it is thought that the blow was struck near the base of the brain. Campbell retained consciousness until a few minutes before his death, and lived long enough to have the last rites of the church administered to him before he closed his eyes for ever. He was brought in by his sister Kate, who had been with him in the street during the evening by a party of young men who were passing quietly along that street. They were accompanied by some of the young men who were with him in the street. They were both seen together on the street during the evening by a party of young men who were passing quietly along that street. They were accompanied by some of the young men who were with him in the street.

It is generally believed that McCaslin, and one or two others, had been drinking pretty freely during the evening, and that they were the streets spilling for a fight. By some means Campbell, who it is said, was sober, got in with the crowd, and being friendly and well liked, he was allowed to remain with them. They were both seen together on the street during the evening by a party of young men who were passing quietly along that street. They were accompanied by some of the young men who were with him in the street.

A man named McFarlane told the reporter that he crossed over in the 10:30 trip of the ferry boat and was going home by way of the street. He saw quite a crowd of young men collected just after he had passed by them he saw two forms come from the Queen square to the street. One of them was Campbell, and the other was a man who he did not know. They were engaged in a fight. About fifteen or sixteen feet from where the row was being passed, Campbell and some other standing directly in the corner of Watson and St. John streets. The platform which runs up on the southern side of St. John street terminates at this point, and Campbell was standing on the very edge of the platform apparently not taking any part in the fight. There appeared to be no fighting at this place, and Mr. McFarlane passed, he turned his head to see how the fighting below the corner was getting on. He had just run up on the southern side of St. John street when he saw Campbell and some other wheel round about half way and fall forward on his face.

He did not appear to double up in any way but fell straight out. For a minute or so he lay still and no one near him, but when a young man who was standing close by where Campbell's feet were saw he did not move, he bent over him and rolling him over on his face called out to the crowd who were fighting, "My God, this fellow is dead!" It was a little time before the melee ended, but when the terrible fact was properly understood, the assistance of those who were already there. Mr. McFarlane also returned and inquired who the injured man was, and he was told that he was Campbell. He then brought him to consciousness. After remaining about ten minutes with the injured man, Mr. McFarlane went to his own home and left some parcels, which he had, there, returning immediately to the scene of the fight. Campbell had been taken away by this time and carried to his home. Mr. McFarlane says the night was quite dark and he could not see the crowd, but to his mind it must have been struck either by a bottle or a stone, most likely a stone. He considers it would have been nearly impossible for any one to strike a blow with a stick or any instrument requiring any distance to swing it in.

The inquest on Campbell's remains was commenced yesterday before Coroner Earle. The most startling fact, so far as is known, was testified as follows:— I saw Campbell on Saturday evening at about 10:30 coming from Mrs. White's—Sam White's mother. I saw him at six o'clock about 10:30 coming through the street, and met him about 10:30 coming through the street. He stopped him and talked to him. McCaslin was with him. He was then pretty well on his feet. Campbell was with him. They would not go home for a moment. They went away from me, and met a crowd of fellows, Sam White, George Godwin, John Bates, and Jack Powers. This was all I saw. I was at the corner of the street, and saw Campbell and some other wheel round about half way and fall forward on his face.

Collins charges that after Melville and the Danenhower party reached a place of safety Danenhower asked permission to search for the DeLong party. Melville refused, and Collins charged that all the circumstances show that had Melville made an energetic search at the beginning or permitted Danenhower to do so DeLong and Melville would have been saved; that Danenhower existed among the officers of the expedition as a man who was not to be trusted; that entering the ice pack was an act of insubordination, and that the Danenhower party were inferior and inefficient. Collins says Danenhower is anxious for an investigation, and will present strong evidence. Newcomb is also ready for it.

FOUL MURDER.

The narrow prejudice— which a few people hold against a patient medicine only because its formula isn't written in Latin which they can't read, is narrow-minded, and not in keeping with the progress of the age. ZEPPEL will cure every case of Dyspepsia and Biliousness if the directions are followed.

In Naples a kind of wife market is held in connection with the founding hospital every year. All the marriageable girls of the institution assemble in a room, to which young men of good character have access. Offer of marriage on the part of any young man is conveyed by allowing his handkerchief to drop before the object of his choice as he passes by. If the girl takes it up, she thereupon signifies her acceptance, but her refusal if she allows it to remain.

Have you these dangerous symptoms? Cough, pain in the side or breast, fever, short breath, night sweats, tickling rising or sore in the throat, distention, nervous debility, or any of the above? If so, you are suffering from one of the most dangerous of diseases, and you had better at once procure a bottle of Adams' Quinine Compound. Trial bottles, 10 cts.; larger bottles, 25 and 50 cts.

This journal of Hygiene warns householders against the use of a feather duster instead of a wet cloth. The duster simply carries the particles from the furniture into the air, where they are inhaled. Dust is formed of innumerable quantities of spores, eggs, and germs, as well as of inert matter. A flourish of the duster may set loose an assassinating germ. The dangerous particles for any one to strike a blow with a stick or any instrument requiring any distance to swing it in.
