My profession is not a pecular one.

There is considerable prejudice against it.

I don't think myself it is much worse

I don't think myself it is much worse I don't think myself it is much worse than a good many others. However, that's nothing to do with my story. Some years ago, me and the gentleman who was at that time connected with me in business—he's met with reversion since then, and at present isn't able to go out—was looking around for a job, being at that time rather hard up, as you might say. We struck a small county town. I ain't goin' to give it way by telling where it was or what the name of it was. There was one bank there. The President was a rich old duffer; owned the mills, owned the bank, owned most of the town. There wasn't no other officer but the cashier, and they had'a boy who used to sweep out and run their errands.

and I guessed the watchman was a coming up the street.

"Ah," says I "you might speak to the watchman, if you see him, and tell him to keep an extra lookout to-night."

"I will," says he, and we both went to the front door.

"There comes the watchman up the street," says he: "Watchman, this man has been fixing the bank lock, and I want you to keep a sharp lookout to-night. He will stay here until Mr. Jennings returns.

"Good night, again," says he, and we shook hands, and he went up the street.

I saw Jim. so-called, in the shadow on the other side of the street, as I stood on the step with the watchman.

"Well," says I to the watchman was a coming up the sireet.

wasn't no other officer but the cashier, and they had'a boy who used to sweep out and run their errands.

The bank was on the main street, pretty well up one end of it—nice snug place—on the corner of a cross street with nothing very near it. We took our observations and found there wasn't no trouble at all about it. There was an old watchman that walked up and down the streets nights, when he didn't fall asleep and forget it. The vault had two doors; the outside one was chilled iron, and had had a three-wheeled combination lock; the inner wasn't no door at all; you could kick it open. It didn't pretend to be nothing but fire proof, and it wasn't even that. The first thing we done, of course, was to fit a key to the outside door. As the lock on the outside door was an old-fashioned Bacon lock, any gentlemon of my profession who chances to read this article, will know just how easy that job was, and how we done it. I may say here that the gentlemen in my line of business having at times a great deal of leisure on their hands, do considerable reading, and are peculiar fond of a neat bit of writing. In fact, in the way of literature, I have found among 'em—however, this being digression, I drop it, and go on with the muin job again.

The bank was on the main street, pretty will be the step with the watchman. "I'll stay tid the watchman. "I'll went back into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bank, and it didn't.

The fit may be done of the take to take the watchman. "I'll wa

m in job again. This was our plan:—After the key was fitted, I was to go into the bank, and Jim that wasn't his name, of course, but let it pass—was to keep watch on the outside. When anyone passed he was to tip me a whistle, and then I doused the glim and lay low; after they goes by, I goes on again. Simple and easy you see. Well the night as we selected, the President ed to be out of town; gone down to the, city as he often did, I got inside all right, with a slide lantern, a breakfast drill, a steel jimmy, a bunch of skelton keys and a green baize bag, to stow away the swag. I fixed my light and rigged my breastdrill, and got to work on the door just over the lock.

Probably a great many of our readers are not so well posted as me about banklocks, and I may say for them that a three. wheel combination lock has three wheels in it, and a slot in each wheel. In order to unlock the door, you have to get the three slots opposite to each other at the top of the lock. Of course, if you know the number the lock is set on, you can do this; but if you don't you have to depend on your ingenuity. There is in each of these wheels a small hole, through which you put a wire through the back of the lock when you change the combination.

Now, if you can bore a hole through the door, and pick up those wheels by run ning a wire through these holes, why you can open the door. I hope I make myself clear. I was boring that hole. The door was chilled iron; about the neatest stuff I ever worked on. I went on steady enough; only stopped when Jim-which as I said, wasn't his real name-whistled outside, and the watchman toddled by. By and by, when I'd got pretty near through, I heard Jim so to speak, whistle again. I stopped, and pretty soon I heard footsteps outside, and I'm blowed if they didn't come right up the bank steps, and I heard a key in the lock. I was so dumfounded when I heard that that you could have slipped the bracelets right on me. I picked up my lantern, and I'll be hanged if I didn't let the slide slip down and throw the light right onto the door, and there was the President. Instead of calling for help, as I thought he would he took a step inside the door and shaded his eyes with his hand and looked at me. I knowed I ought to knock him down and cut out, but I'm blest if I could, I was that surprised.

"Who are you?" says he. "Who are you?" says I, thinking that was an innocent remark as he commenced it, and a-trying all the time to collect "I'm the President of the bank," says he, kinder short; "something's the mat-ter with the lock?" By George! The idea come to me then. "Yes sir," says I, touching my cap; "Mr. Jennings, he telegraphed to me this morning as the lock was out of order and he couldn't get in, and so I'm come on to open it for him.

"I told Jennings a week ago," says he, "that he ought to get that lock fixed. "He's been a-writing letters, and he's gone up to his house to get another letter he wanted for to answer." "Well, why don't you go right on?" "I've got almost through," says I; "and I didn't want to finish up and open the vault till there was somebody here."

"That's very creditable to you," says ne; "a very proper sentiment, my man. You can't," he goes on, coming round by the door, "be too particular about avoiding the very suspicion of evil."

"No, sir," says I, kinder modest like.

"What do you suppose is the matter with the lock?" says he.

"I don't rightly know, yet," says I; but I rather think it's a little worn on account of not being oiled enough. These 'ere locks ought to be oiled about once a year."
"Well," he says, "you might as well go right on, now I'm here; I will stay till Jennings comes. Can't I help you? Hold your lantern or something of that sort?" The thought come to me like a flash, and I turned around and says:—

"How do I know you're the President. I ain't ever seen you afore, and you may be a-trying to crack this bank, for all that I know ?"

"That's a very proper inquiry, my man," says he, "and ishows a most remarkable degree of discretion. I confess I should not have thought of the position and he took some letters from his coat. I suppose I ought to have gone right on, then, but I was beginning to feel interested in making him prove who he money, by addressing was, and so I says: "You might have got them letters to put up a job on me. "You're a very honest man," says he, "one among a thousand. Don't think I'm at all offended at your persistence. No, my good fellow, I like it, I like it," and he laid his hand on my shoulder. "Now here," says he, taking a bundle out of his pocket, "is a package of $10, 000 in bonds. A burglar wouldn't be apt to carry those around with him, would he?" I bought them in the city yesterday, and I stopped here to-night on my way home to place them in the vault, and I may add, that your simple and manly honesty has so touched me, that I would willingly leave them in your hands for willingly leave them in your hands for safe keeping. You needn't blush at my I suppose I did turn sorter red when I see them bonds.

" Are you satisfied now?" says he. I told him I was, thoroughly; and so I was. So I picked up my drill again, and gave him my lantern to hold, so that I him, outside once or twice, and I like to dressing have burst out laughing, thinking he must be wondering what was going on inside. I worked away and kept explaining to him what I was trying to do. He was very much interested in mechanics, he Warning Voice. said, and he knowed as I was a man as was up in my business, by the way I went to work. He asked me about what wages I got, and how I liked my business, and ed round once in a while and looked at an 1 Clover Seed. Now in store: him a setting up there as solemn as a biled owl, with my dark lantern in his NORTHERN RED CLOVER SEED blessed hand, and I'm blamed if I didn't think I should have to holler right out. I got through the lock pretty soon and put my wire in and opened it. Then he vault.

"I'll put my bonds in," said he, "and go home. You can lock up, and wait till Mr. Jennings comes. 1 don't suppose you will try to fix the lock to-night?" I told him I shouldn't do anything more with it now, as we could get in before
