A DOUBLE CRIME.

The wholesale produce and commission store of Mr. Purvis, on Delaware avenue, near Vine street, was robbed on the night of October 17, 1865.

His story was very similar to the one told by Yerkes, with this difference—the

The safe had been opened apparently by false keys, and upward of nine thousand dollars in greenbacks were abstracted. A package of bonds to the amount of $2,000 more remained untouched.

Two clerks, both young men, usually slept in the store. August Yerkes had been in the employ of Mr. Harrison Purvis about four years and enjoyed the confidence of his employer, Pembroke Sharon the other clerk, had only recently been taken, but the manner in which he been taken, but the manner in which he took hold of the business impressed Mr. that they picked him up in the river. Yerkes still unconscious, and at the suggestion of Varnoe he was conveyed in that condition to the hospital.
"Now, Mr. Purvis," said Varnoe, "you will please point out to me which are the clothes usually worn by Mr. Sharon while on duty at the store."

"Certainly, sir," replied the gentleman; "that is readily done," and he went to a closet where the clerks kept their outer garments and opened it. He took piece after piece from the hooks, an exclamation as if of surprise escaping him "What is it?" asked Varnoe, when Mr. Purvis laid the garments on the bed.

"Why, as I live, Sharon has not only left his coat and vest behind, but also his pants!" said Mr. Purvis, with a look of "That is singular," remarked the detec-
