

A STRANGE OFFER.

[illegible]

son, saw that it was tenderly administered told the elder sister that I would be back in a few minutes, and resisting all her attempts to light me down stairs, groped my way into the street. I noticed an eating house at but a little distance as we came along; and a statement of the case, backed by the all-powerful king of the world gold, soon secured the loan of a couple of chairs, fender light and in a brief half hour that little room were something like an air of comfort. Another hour had passed, and the two child were closed in slumbe, and I urged my sister also to go and seek repose, but in vain.

"At least lie down and let me cover you with my cloak," I urged.

"No, doctor," was the constant reply, "I cannot, I am so happy. It must have been good to die that night, wondering steps to us."

And so we sat with the night wind roaring without, watching the almost angelic face of the peacefully slumbering child, and talked of what I was more than anxious to hear. But the conversation of those long, dark hours, can be condensed into a very brief space.

She who would have sold her body for the sake of giving a little longer life to her sister, was the daughter of at least supposed wealth. But a few years previously she could have held her head as high as the highest. Both birth and education fitted her for it. But misfortune came—a series of disasters upon the land upon the sea—against which no human forethought could guard combined with treachery and ingratitude of the deepest dye swept away all. In ten short months she lost her husband, her mother, leaving an infant of but few months old. The fond father struggled against the tide manfully for a brief time, but he failed. He left his orphaned wife through the valley and beyond the shining river, leaving the elder sister to provide for the younger.

In the fourth year of the poor girl, "I was able to live comfortably by the sale of the furniture and articles of value I possessed. Then—Why should I unbecomingly turn to a stranger? So she stood stopping suddenly, and looking me full in the face."

"Because," I replied, with a smile at her earnestness; "because you have found a true heart, and one that can feel for you."

"Yes, may kind heaven be thanked I feel that it is so. Well, I struggled on, on fought were the better word," she continued, with the lines about her marble mouth becoming suddenly hard—"I fought for life, something, sometimes obtaining a little more strength, perhaps doing anything that my strength permitted, until illness came. Still I gave myself up to despair. Truly I was bound to do so. My death had been agreed to by my sister. Of the insults I received while seeking for work, I shall not speak."

I did find no employment?"

"None! Piece by piece I parted with the little bit of furniture I was the possessor of until what you see was all that remained."

"My poor child!"

"It is true—I saw that she was serving herself to tell me something that was painful, very painful, and would have crippled her, but she refused to be comforted—"It is true that money was offered me by more than one man, but I instantly and indignantly hurled it back in my insultuous manner, but she resolutely returned this bitter note with all my hope gone, I determined to sell my body to some surgeon."

"What in the name of heavens could have put such an idea into your head?"

"I don't know—I cannot tell. Somewhere I had either heard or read of something of the sort."

"You must have been very desperate."

"On the verge of distraction," I said, but one dream—one desire, to save my darling even a single hour of pain."

"Have you no relatives?"

She pressed her lips to smooth the hovering Bessie, and imprinted a kiss upon the curl-wreathed and snowy brow; and I thought what desperate trials our young man must have passed through in order to bring her thus to look calmly upon giving herself to the knife and the ribald jest of the dissecting room. And I thought, too, of the sterling truth of her own words, that only the great payments of gold when so hedged by want and pain in their terrible shape.

"I might too—but she interrupted me with—"

"My kind friend—indeed, I might say, my only friend, whom God raised up to me in my hour when all was darkness and misery and gloom, I might say, my grave was staring me in the face, my kind friend, but I am keeping you from your rest."

"O yes! A surgeon's life is one that is constantly broken in upon, and will you pardon me?—I have never had my heart so deeply touched, or my feelings so much interested as my life."

A faint rose blush came up from the exquisitely moulded throat and mantled the soft cheeks. She took my hand and pressed it to her lips, leaving a warm kiss upon them.

When the morning light broke again over the gay city, the storm had ceased and nature smiled, cold it is true, but smilingly. There was a plentiful breakfast served in that little room that same morning.

As I write these lines, I (with some at least, of my dream of wealth and position receding) stand in the doorway, looking the wraithful howling of the storm without. There is a beautiful brown haired woman sewing near—a sprite of a girl dearest to me—she has woven crimson ribbons, on the rug in front of the glowing grate. I look up suddenly. Our eyes meet. Are we both thinking of the past? I think so, and I softly peep into my chair and twines her arms around my neck.

"My darling, do you remember such a night as this a year ago?" she asks, up.

"Yes," I answer, with a smile.

"And of what brought me to you?"

"Yes!"

She looks still nearer to me. I feel her warm breath upon my cheek. I feel her fervent kisses—such a one give to a young and lovely wife can only, and as if, as it were, whispered rather by spirit than by flesh.

"Now, darling, I am yours, body and soul."

"Thank God that it is so."

"Life is a riddle," says an exchange. Yes; lots of people give it up every day.

KIDNEY-WORT

HAS BEEN PROVED THE SURGEST OF ALL KIDNEY DISEASES.

This medicine cures a diseased urinary tract, restores the normal action of the organs, and removes all impurities from the blood. It is a powerful diuretic, and increases the flow of urine, thereby cleansing the system and restoring health.

Ladies. For complaints peculiar to females, such as leucorrhoea, dysmenstruation, and weakness, KIDNEY-WORT is especially adapted. It is a safe and reliable remedy, and its use is recommended by all physicians.

Beware of cheap imitations. The genuine KIDNEY-WORT is prepared by J. B. ROGERS, and is sold by all druggists.

GOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS, WHOLESALERS.

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.

(From the Boston Globe.)

Mrs. Editor—

The above is a good likeness of Mrs. Lydia R. Plunkett, of Lynn, Mass., who above all other human beings may be truly called the "Dear Friend of Women," as none of her correspondents love to call her. Mrs. Plunkett is devoted to her trade, which is the outcome of a life-story, and is obliged to keep her busy attending to her household duties, and to her correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its special burden of suffering, or joy, or release from it. Her benevolent and generous heart is ever ready to respond to the appeals of the afflicted, and to the prayers of the distressed. I have personally investigated many an instance of the truth of this.

On account of the proven merits of its recommendation and well care by the physicians in the family of the uterus, Leucorrhoea, irregular and painful menstruation, all ovarian troubles, inflammation and irritation, Floodings, all Displacements and the consequent general weakness, and is especially adapted to the change of life.

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes nervous debility, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bleating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Permenation and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, coming pain, weight and heaviness, always permanently cured by its use. It will afford relief, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the law that governs the female system.

It costs only 60¢ per bottle or six for $3.00, and is sold by druggists. Any advice required as to special cases, and the names of many who have been restored to perfect health by the use of the "Vegetable Compound," can be obtained by addressing Mrs. Plunkett, with stamp for reply, at her home in Lynn, Mass.

For Kidney Complaint of either sex this compound is unsurpassed as a remedial agent.

Mrs. Plunkett's "Liver Pills" are now written, "are best in the world for the cure of Constipation, Biliousness, and Torpor to the Liver. They Purge without wounding in its special line and hide take from the bowels Compound is singularly pure."

All must respect her as an Angel of Mercy whose noble ambition is to do good to others.
