And we believe that a conviction to that effect has crept slowly, unwillingly, and shudderingly, over the doughty, but too confident leader of the Opposition, and his henchmen-the scholarly Elder, and the legal Ritchie. The mission of the leader to the benighted constituences in the black north, resulted in the conversion of few or none to his political supporters have come to nothing, and has left them bewildered and chagrined. Defeat of the Gladstone Govern-The Gladstone Government have had since the murder of the Secretaries, paralyzed their policy of conciliation and impelled them to re-adopt coercive measures more stringent than ever,-a difficult course to steer, By their stringent Repression Bill they have alienated Mr. Parnell, who before its introduction was under some compact to give them support in return for amendments in the Land Act, which would relieve tenants from payment of arrears of rent. Mr. Gladstone has not given up his Arrears' Bill, though Mr. Parnell had done all in his power to oppose the passage of the Repression Bill - throw out its more severe clauses, or abate their severity. The persistency with which Mr. Parnell and the Irish members opposed the Bill, step by step, seems to have sorely ruffled the temper of Mr. Gladstone, who saw the session passing away and nothing done, and he wished, so report states, to have them suspended on the plea of obstruction, and get the Repression Bill pushed through in their absence. A very extraordinary scene took place in the Commons on Friday, 30th ult, at one of the most prolonged sessions ever held in the House,-at one time it seemed like Bedlam let loose. After nineteen hours of debate, the chairman, Dr. Herald to lecture others on the impropriety made himself obnoxious to the sanguinary Playfair, took the opportunity of a of their conduct. more than ordinary angry altercation, to move the suspension of Mr. Parnell members on his list who were not present in and a number of the Irish memders. But he overdid his part, for he put the names of the House, and, likely, in bed at the time. Some moderate Liberals and Conservatives thought the Irish members were not guilty of systematic obstruction, and had not been well treated. Considering the temper of the House after the debate of Friday, 30th ult., the defeat of the Government the following Friday, 7th inst., is understandable.
