The Centennial Exhibition.

In all civilized countries of the world, Exhibitions of the material progress of the people, in agricultural and industrial pursuits, in the arts and sciences, and in the mechanical advances of the times, have come to be regarded as the most assured plan of educating branches to Woodstock, from Woodstock the people. As the centuries go forward, as mprovement becomes more marked, so the demand for surpassing each passing year in all that pertains to the welfare and develop- Jance of capital brains and energy to back it ment of men, is sought to be gratified.

drawn out by Exhibitions, learn of each other the handicraft that enables one to outdistance the other. New ideas are developed, and old ones strengthened, by the contact of man with his fellow worker, no matter what sphere his labor enriches. The people learn too, that all the wisdom, the knowledge, and the practical experience necessary to the prosecution of their particular Art, is not confined within the limited range of their own experience, or enclosed in the circle of their observation. The Exhibition is to those who choose to take advantage of its teaching, great school, wherein is learned through the stock Junction, which involved the construcobserving power of the intelligent spectator, the great and rapid changes in the methods and manners of the world, as well, a source of wonder, as of education.

The lessons taught by the Centennial Exhibition, now in progress in the city of Saint John, will create a deeper impression, however, than the ordinary observations of the ducts of the field, the mine, the workshop, the waters surrounding and intersecting their hospitable and prosperous Province, the evidences of a fertile and promising land, which one hundred years ago, when many of their ancestors landed on its shores, was a howling wilderness, inhabited almost entirely by Indians, although in some districts, the French colonist had to a limited degree, taken advantage of the splendid natural resources of the country, and converted to himself, a small portion of its territory, for the advancement of the primary industry of agriculture. One hundred years in a country's history, brings about vast changes in the habits and conditions of its people, but that period has witnessed in New Brunswick, a greater transition, the occupancy and settlement of a Province, whose people take their place in all the arts and sciences of life, beside those whose most remote ancestors, we might almost say, Branch Store-St. Mary's Ferry have enjoyed all the advantages of education

Their first step was to broaden the gauge to the standard width, which was undertaken in the spring of 1881, and finished by October, in the same year, except that portion of the road between Aroostook and Edmundston.

In changing the gauge, the Company laid the road with steel rails, using 15,000 tons in the work. Changes were made also at two important points whereby easier grades were obtained and the length of the main line shortened, the most important, perhaps, being the construction of the branch from Woodstock to Newburg, connecting with the main line at that point instead of at Woodtion of a new bridge across the St. John, 12,-300 feet in length.
