We had not, in the years gone by, The grace that art discovers ; Our lives were calmer; you and I Were very simple lovers. And when, our daily duties o'er, We strayed beside the rushes, The only gems you ever wore
Were bright and blooming blushes.

Our rustic way was slow, but yet Some good there was about it, And many ills we now regret Old habits would have routed I know our children still can see The fifth commandment's beauty-May they obey, as we once did, From love, and not from duty.

The world to-day is far to high In wisdom to confess them, But well we know, dear, you and I, For what we have to bless them. Though love was in the heart of each, I trembled to accost you;
Had you required a polished speech
I think I should have lost you.

No doubt our minds are slow to guage The ways we are not heeding ; But here upon our memory's page

Is very simple reading. It says the forms we still hold fast Were wise as well as pleasant-The good old customs of the past

Have leavened all the present.

A WIFE'S MISTAKE,

Her whole appearance, indeed, was by no means attractive. Her slender feet were thrust into a pair of old, well-worn slippers; the loose robe in which she had wrapped herself was neither sound nor scrupulously clean, and its faded dinginess was unrelieved by any feminine niceties in the shape of collar or cuffs, the massive dead gold brooch at her throat being evidently placed there for use rather than ornament, to supply the want of proper fastenings.

Her rich golden hair was gathered into a dishevelled, unbecoming knot at the summit of her head, from which a stray tress would occasionally wander to be pushed impatiently away.

An expression of annoyance clouded her husband's features as he carefully picked his path through the intricate many with the Comtesse Rollings in hopelessly in the leading man, unless he hopelessly in idealing in it in tractive. "How can you exist in such confusion, Margaret? Where is your maid that she does not attend to these things?" he exclaimed, impatiently, as he stumbled over a hat and cloak that lay huddled together on a footstool.

"I have none at present. Ferris complained that she could not do herself justice in my service, and left last week," she replied, carlessly unfolding and perusing the notes. "Mrs. Vanburgh's dance on the twelith, I could not possibly go there; Professor Brandt gives a scientific entertainment the same night: Mrs. Osborne's amateur concert; Lady Forrest's 'at home,' fourteenth and fifth teenth—one of those days is fixed for a lecture on 'The Darwinian Theory;" I have already procured tickets.

It was the night of the seventeenth— the Marchioness of Bradley's ball. Be-neath the soft light of the chandelier in "No indeed I could not attend it," she replied, with sudden enthusiasm. "The discussion class holds more than a usually interesting meeting on that night; I am very busy preparing notes upon the subject, 'The Presence of Fossils in Pre-his toric Strata.'"

"Highly entertaining no doubt; the comprehensive character of your diversions really surprises me," was the sarcastic remark. "But is it your intention to devote all your life to scientific rubbish of this sort, Margaret?" he continued, in a different tone.

"In the soft light of the chandelier in her spacious drawing-room stood Morgaret Trevor, anxiously awaiting the sound of her husband's footstep descending the stairs. They had not met since his departure on the morning of that memorable day. He had entered the house an hour ago, and the carriage was already in waiting to convey him to the ball.

At length her patience was rewarded; she heard his step approaching, and as he reached the hall, she threw open the door, disclosing herself, a dazzling vision on its threshold.

Indescribably beautiful did she look

Suddenly Margaret's heart gave a wild throb as she became aware of an overpowering odour of patchouli, and a voice familiarly addressing her husband: "At last! Ingrate! to keep me waiting so long. I have been in despair." Instantly bending forward with grace-

The Rev. Z. P. Wilds, well-known city of the late eminent Judge Wilds, of the

"78 E. 54th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

MESSRS. J. C. AYER & Co., Gentlemen:

Last winter I was troubled with a most uncomfortable itching humor affecting more especially my limbs, which itched so intolerably at night, and burned so intensely, that I could scarcely bear any clothing over them. I was also a sufferer from a severe catarrh and catarrhal cough; my appetite was poor, and my system a good deal run down. Knowing the value of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, by observation of many other cases, and from personal use in former years, I began taking it for the above-named disorders. My appetite improved almost from the first dose. After a short time the fever and itching were allayed, and all signs of irritation of the skin disappeared. My catarrh and cough were also cured by the same means, and my general health greatly improved, until it is now excellent. I feel a hundred per cent stronger, and I attribute these results to the use of the SARSAPARILLA, which I recommend with all confidence as the best blood medicine ever devised. I took it in small doses three times a day, and used, in all, less than two bottles. I place these facts at your service, hoping their publication may do good,

Yours respectfully. Z. P. Wilds."
